81. Phannias, the son of Samuel, was made high-priest in 70, the year Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed, and a final period was put to the Jewish priesthood.

TABLE IV.

Synchronology of the most Remarkable Events which have occurred in the World from the Creation to the Destruction of Jerusalem.

EPOCH I.

FROM THE CREATION TO THE DELUGE; 1656 YEARS.

Julian Period.	A. M.	B. C.
710	1	4004	The work of creation begun, according to Usher's computation of the Hebrew text, on Sunday, the 23d of Oct. See Ge. ch. I. First day: the heavens and the earth created; origin of light; distinction between day and night. [These days, or periods, however, are of uncertain but definite length, perhaps thousands of years.] Second day: the firmament created, and the superior and inferior waters divided. Third day: the earth drained; seas, lakes, rivers, &c., formed; trees, plants, and vegetables produced. Fourth day: the sun, moon, stars, and planetary system [visible]. Fifth day: fowls and fishes produced. Sixth day: quadrupeds, reptiles, insects, and lastly man, created. The garden of Eden planted, and Adam and his wife placed therein. Seventh day: the 1st Sabbath, or day of rest, on Saturday, October 29. *The first woman sins; leads her husband into the transgression; and both are expelled the garden of Eden. The woman receives the name of Eve, as being the mother of all mankind. Expiatory sacrifices first instituted.
711	2	4002	*Cain and Abel born about this time.
839	199	3875	*Abel murdered by Cain.
840	130	3874	Seth born, the 3d of the patriarchs before the flood; Adam being the 1st.
946	235	3769	Enos, son of Seth, born, the third patriarch, in whose days it is said (Ge. 4:26), 'men began to call upon the name of the Lord'; or, as some tr., 'men began to call themselves by the name of the Lord'; hence originated the distinction between the descendants of Seth, who are called the sons of God , and those of Cain, who are denominated sons of men . It is also supposed that idolatry was introduced by the latter about this time; [and Cain worshipped.]
1035	325	3760	Caïnan, the 4th patriarch, born, in the 90th year of Enos.
1105	395	3690	Mahaleleel, the 5th patriarch, born, in the 70th year of Caïnan.
1170	460	3544	Jared, the 6th patriarch, born, in the 65th year of Mahaleleel.
1339	629	3369	Enoch, the 7th patriarch, born, in the 162d year of Jared.
1345	635	3369	[*Beyond this is the Fabulous Period of Chinese History; viz. Pwankwo, the first that appeared 'after the heavens were separated'; then, 12 brothers, who reigned 45,000 years; 11, who reigned 18,000; 9, who reigned 18,000. At 3369, Choo-foo-tze commences his Chinese history with the first king of the obscure period of the 'Three Sovereigns' dynasty, which lasted till 2592. In 2789, caps and garments are said to have been made. In 3854 lived Fuh-hi, who taught agriculture, fishing, the care of cattle, marriage, music, &c. And beyond this date is placed the invention of fire. Several things affirmed of this period, says Choo-foo-tze, 'were all pushed up by people who lived in subsequent ages.']
1397	687	3317	Methuselah, the 8th patriarch, born, in the 65th year of Enoch.
1584	874	3130	Lamech, the 9th patriarch, born, in the 187th year of Methuselah.
1640	830	3074	Death of Adam, at the age of 930 years.
1697	987	3017	Enoch, for his piety, translated to heaven, in his 365th year.
1752	1042	2962	Seth dies at the age of 912 years.
1785	1056	2948	Noah, the 10th patriarch before the flood, born, in the 182d year of Lamech.
1850	1140	2864	Enos dies, aged 905 years.
1945	1235	2769	Caïnan dies, aged 910 years.
2000	1290	2714	Mahaleleel dies, aged 895 years.
2132	1422	2582	Jared dies, aged 928 years.
2245	1535	2469	God reveals to Noah his purpose of destroying the inhabitants of the earth by a general deluge; commissions him to preach repentance, and commands him to prepare an ark, or vessel, for the preservation of himself and family from the impending judgment. Ge. 6:5, &c.
2266	1556	2448	Japheth, eldest son of Noah, born.
2268	1558	2446	Shem, second son of Noah, born. He is considered as the first of the patriarchs after the flood.
2270	1560	2444	Ham, the youngest son of Noah, born about this time.
2361	1651	2353	Lamech, father of Noah, dies, aged 777.
2366	1656	2348	Methuselah dies, aged 969 years, being the oldest of all men.
			The preaching of Noah having produced no general reformation, the Almighty orders him to enter the ark with his own family only, and the animals who were instinctively directed to it. This takes place on the 17th day of the 2d month (which, according to Abp. Usher's calculation, was Sunday, Nov. 30), and on that day so 'mighty the rain began and continued 40 days, as described Ge. 7:11, &c. The whole period of the deluge was 150 days.

EPOCH II. — FROM THE DELUGE TO THE VOCATION OF ABRAHAM; 427 YEARS.

2367	1657	2347	The deluge. — On Wednesday, May 6, the ark rests on the mountains of Ararat; but Noah does not quit it till Friday, December 18.
2368	1658	2346	Arphaxad, the first patriarch after the flood, born.
2373	1663	2341	Malediction of Canaan, youngest son of Ham.
2403	1693	2311	Salah, the second postdiluvian patriarch, born.
2433	1723	2281	Eber born, whose name signifies passage ; whence it is conjectured that about this time the first migration from the neighborhood of Ararat took place. It probably consisted of the younger branches of the family of Ham, who, travelling towards the west and south, settled in Phœnicia and Egypt.
2467	1757	2247	Peleg born, in whose days the earth was divided, as his name implies.
			*The tower of Babel built by Noah's posterity, as a rallying point, in the plain of Shinar; whereupon God miraculously confounds their language, and causes them to disperse. — Usher.
2489	1759	2245	*Asshur begins the kingdom of Assyria, according to the general notion of chronologers.
2490	1770	2234	The celestial observations of the Chaldeans are begun at Babylon, according to a register sent by Callisthenes to Aristotle.
2491	1771	2233	B. C. 331, containing the asterial phenomena of 1903 years.
			*Nimrod, surnamed Belus, begins the kingdom of Babel, or Babylon, about this time, and expels Asshur from the south of the land of Shinar, who retires to the east bank of the Tigris, and builds Nineveh and other cities. About the same time, according to Mr. Bryant, the Cushites, or progeny of Cush, the father of Nimrod, project the tower of Babel.
2497	1787	2217	Reu born, the fourth of the postdiluvian patriarchs.
2516	1806	2198	*The first dynasty of Chinese emperors, called Hys , or Hsu , or Tang , begins, and lasts 441 years, under 17 emperors. [Morrison commences it with Ta-yu, in 2169, and closes it with Keewang, in 1756; 413 years. Ta-yu, the repaireur of the effects of the deluge, died in 2142, aged 100. He was 9 cubits 2 tenths high. He divided the land into 9 regions, referred to in the histories Woo-king and She-shoo. Morrison quotes the following from a Chinese work: — 'Of the Shang-shoo, which treats of this period, there is a copy called Koo-wan; since the dynasty Sung (A. D. 1100), all the literati have much suspected that it was spurious.' The other copy is not doubted, says M., adding, 'that Confucius had 3000 odes from which he compiled the She-king, is disputed. The Yih-king also is mortified; some quotations from it are not now found in it.' Wine was made by E-teih, and Ta-yu drank of it, and delighted in it, but, apprehensive of its consequences in succeeding ages, procured its prohibition.]
2526	1816	2188	*The kingdom of Egypt begins, under Mizor, or Metzor, the son of Ham, chief of the tribe called Mizraim.
2529	1819	2185	Serug, the fifth postdiluvian patriarch, born.
2558	1848	2156	*Babel overthrown, according to Mr. Bryant, and the lip of the builders confounded. The Chaldean priests collect their sacred utensils, and, returning north-westward, build a city called Shinar (the Singara of Ptolemy), in Mesopotamia.

* Events of uncertain date are thus marked; and the brackets denote extracts from Morrison or Wilkinson. Ed.

EPOCH II. (CONTINUED.)

AD. B.C.	A. M.	B. C.
9	1849	2155	Nahor, the sixth of the patriarchs, born. — The Assyrians begin to return to the south of Shinar, or Babylonia. — *Serug settles in Ur of the Chaldees.
8	1808	2148	[The Meaco-tse existed at this time, and have continued as a distinct people, chiefly in the mountains, to the present day. Were they not, asks Morrison, the aborigines, and the Chinese a colony?]]
8	1898	2186	Birth of Terah, the seventh patriarch from Shem.
1	1891	2193	[Suphis, or Seopbis, king in Egypt. He built the great pyramid. These 3 kings, Suphis, Sen Seopbis, and Mencheres, should be the Cheops, Cephren (his brother) and Mycerinus of Herodotus, whom he has strangely misplaced, making them posterior to Sesotris and Moris. Diodorus calls Cheops, Chemsis, or Chemsis? [Ham of SS.?] W.]
0	1880	2114	Aashur, having subjugated the Cuthites, assumes the regal title of Belus, and reigns 55 years, which begins the kingdom of Assyria.
0	1880	2114	*Noah is by some supposed about this time to have founded the Chinese monarchy. — He is known to the natives under the name of Pe-hi .
5	1915	2080	*Egialis settles in the Peloponnesus, and begins a kingdom, at first called Ægialeis , afterwards Apia , and finally Sicyon , being the oldest of the Grecian states.
1	1921	2083	[Sen Seopbis (i. e. Seopbis's brother) reigns in Egypt. Era of Chinese Yao. 2057. W.]
5	1945	2060	*Ninus, son and successor of Aashur, begins to reign at Nineveh.
5	1956	2049	Ninus, after a long siege, takes the city of Shinar from the Chasdim, or Chaldeans, and appoints a viceroy there. Soon afterwards, he marries Semiramis, of Cuthian extraction, by which means the Sabian idolatry is introduced among the posterity of Shem.
6	1946	2056	*Acmon and Donas, sons of Manmus, or Thorgama (the Hypseios of Sanchoniatho, and the Ashkenaz of Moses), set out on their celebrated expedition from Phrygia into Cappadocia, Armenia, and the parts of Scythia on the north and east of the Caspian Sea; on their return, they assume the title of Titans, or 'sons of the earth,' or of 'the sun.'
8	1948	2056	Nahor and Haran, sons of Terah, born.
1	1961	2043	[Mosebaria, or Mencheres, reigns in Egypt; and Musthis (?) in 2022. W.]
7	1987	2017	The 16th dynasty (according to Eusebius) of five Theban kings, begins in Egypt, and continues 190 years. Their names are unknown.
8	1998	2011	[Pammas Archondes (?) reigns in Egypt. W.]
6	1996	2008	Peleg dies, aged 230.
7	1997	2007	Nahor dies, aged 148. — Semiramis succeeds her husband Ninus in Assyria, and soon afterwards lays the foundation of Babylon. The Cuthites revolt, and are defeated and dispersed.
2	2002	2002	A numerous body of Cuthites, having been expelled the dominions of Semiramis, enter Egypt, under the title of Hyc-ees , or King-Shepherd , and subjugate the lower country during 250 years. This is the 17th dynasty of Manetho.
3	2005	2001	[Apappus, or Aphoph, ascends the Egyptian throne; his name in Coptic signifies giant , maximus .]
5	2006	1998	Noah dies, aged 950 years; 350 years after the flood.
8	2008	1996	Birth of Abram, the eighth of the patriarchs.
1	2011	1993	*Uranus, the same as Cetus, son of Acmon, begins to reign in Asia Minor, and soon afterwards passes into Europe, and begins the empire of the Celtes, or descendants of Gomer, the eldest son of Japheth.
8	2018	1986	Birth of Sarai, wife of Abram.
6	2026	1978	Rou dies, aged 239.
7	2027	1977	*The city of Damascus is said to have been built about this time, [and on the place where Abel was killed, whence its name.]
9	2030	1965	Ninyas, or Zameis, succeeds his mother Semiramis at Babylon and Nineveh, and reigns 38 years. To secure his western provinces, he appoints a viceroy at Shinar.
9	2030	1965	Serug dies, at the age of 230.
6	2038	1938	The Cuthites in Asia, taking advantage of the indolence of Ninyas, form a general insurrection; which gives rise to a coalition of princes of the line of Shem, with Chedorlamer, king of Elam, or Persia, at their head. This is the beginning of the first Titanic war, which lasts about 11 years.
7	2077	1927	Arius, or Arioch, succeeds Ninyas in the kingdom of Assyria, and reigns 30 years. The first Titanic war concludes with the total subjugation of the Cuthites: Chedorlamer, king of Elam (Persia), conquers the kings of Sodom, Gomorrah, Adma, Zebolim, and Bela, or Zoar, and keeps them in subjection 12 years. Tidal, king of nations (or of Syria), reigns about this time.
			*Uranus deposed, and the Celtic empire usurped by his youngest son, Ilus, or Saturn, the first prince that ever wore a crown. Cres reigns in Crete about the same time.
8	2078	1926	Abram removes from Ur of the Chaldees to Haran, in Mesopotamia, taking with him his nephew Lot, his wife Sarai, and his father Terah. At this time, the idolatrous worship introduced by Semiramis had obtained a great ascendancy in Assyria.
			*Zoroaster the Sactrian, chief of the Guebres, or fire-worshippers, and Hermee, the Egyptian, are reputed to have lived about this time.
3	2083	1921	Terah, the father of Abram, dies, aged 205. Abram, in obedience to the divine command, removes into Canaan, being 75 years of age. The 430 years of sojourning, spoken of Ex. 12:40, 41, are generally reckoned from this epoch.

EPOCH III. — FROM THE VOCATION OF ABRAHAM TO THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL; 430 YEARS.

6	2084	1920	Abram goes into Egypt, on account of a famine in Canaan; and causes Sarai to pass for his sister.
6	2086	1918	Abram having returned with his family to Canaan, Lot separates himself from him, and goes to Sodom; while Abram resides in the valley of Mamre, near Hebron.
2	2090	1914	Revolt of the kings of Sodom, &c., from Chedorlamer, which occasions a war the next year, when the king of Sodom is defeated, and Lot is taken away among the captives.
1	2091	1913	Abram defeats the troops of Chedorlamer, rescues Lot and the other captives, and is blessed by Melchisedec, priest and king of Salem; on this occasion Abram is supposed to have begun the practice of giving tithes.
3	2093	1911	God promises a numerous posterity to Abram.
6	2094	1910	Ishmael born to Abram, of his concubine, Hagar. About the same time, Bela, the first king of the Horites, begins to reign.
5	2096	1908	Arphaxad dies, 403 years after the birth of Salah.
3	2100	1904	*Jupiter, son of Saturn, king of the Celtes, born, according to Perron's calculation. [Wilkinson makes kings in Egypt, Achesus Ocaras (?) 1901; Nitocris (?) 1900; Myræus (?) 1890; Thyosimares (?) 1880; Thynillus (?) 1866; Sempu-crates (?) 1848; also Argos founded, 1866; Ogyges' deluge in Attica, 1848.]
7	2107	1897	God makes a covenant with Abram — enjoins the rite of circumcision — changes his name to Abraham , and his wife's to Sarah — and gives them the promise of a legitimate son. The cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c., destroyed; but Lot is delivered, and dwells in a cave of the mountains, with his two daughters.
3	2108	1896	Isaac, the child of promise, born to Abraham of Sarah; Abraham being 100 years old. — About the same time, the daughters of Lot, by an incestuous commerce with their father, give birth to Moab and Ben-ammi, heads of the Moabites and Ammonites.
3	2110	1894	Ishmael and his mother Hagar dismissed from Abraham's house.
3	2118	1886	Treaty between Abraham and Abimelech, king of Gerar, relative to the well of Beer-sheba.
3	2126	1878	Salah dies, 403 years after the birth of Eber.
3	2133	1871	Isaac being 25 years of age, his father is commanded to offer him up in sacrifice to God; but the Almighty substitutes a ram in his stead, on finding the faith of Abraham unshaken.
1	2141	1863	*Second revolt of the Titans, by whom Saturn is deposed; but by the timely arrival of Jupiter with forces from Crete, the rebellion is checked, and Saturn restored.
5	2145	1859	Sarah dies, aged 127 years.
3	2148	1856	Isaac marries Rebekah.
3	2154	1850	*Abraham marries Keturah about this time.
3	2158	1846	Shem, son of Noah, dies at the age of 600 years.
3	2162	1842	*Jupiter, at the age of 62, deposes his father, and reigns in Thessaly 60 years. A third revolt, better known by the title of the Gigantes' war , quickly ensues; Jupiter and his friends are obliged to seek refuge in Egypt, and other distant countries, till the valor of Hercules enables them to return, and the Titans are totally overthrown.
3	2168	1836	Eau and Jacob born; their father being 60 years of age.
1	2174	1830	[Men-ma-Rep, Menmaf, or Menmoph, king in Egypt. 15th dynasty of 1 king. W.]
1	2181	1823	*The kingdom of Argos begun by Inachus, son of Oceanus, and cousin to Jupiter, whose lieutenant he appears to have been. — Langlet Du Fresnoy .
1	2182	1822	*Memnon, the Egyptian, is by some supposed to have invented letters. According to the supposition of our tables, he is the same with Amenophis II., who began to reign B. C. 1718, and is the Pharaoh who promoted Joseph.
1	2183	1821	Abraham dies, aged 175 years.
7	2187	1817	Eber dies, 430 years after the birth of Peleg.
3	2208	1796	*Ogyges reigns over Boetia, Attica, &c., 1030 years before the first Olympiad.

TABLES.

EPOCH III. (CONTINUED.)

Julian Period.	A. M.	B. C.
3918	3906	1796	*Esau marries two Canaanitish women about this time.
3923	3923	1793	*Jupiter dies, aged 122, and the empire of the Celtes is dissolved. Perron.
3934	3924	1780	Amenophis I., king of Thebes and Memphis, in Egypt, having united most of the minor states of that country, and taken the power of the Hyc-soo, assumes the title of Pharaoh, or universal monarch.
3935	3925	1779	Jacob by subtlety obtains his father's blessing, which had been promised to Esau — goes to Haran, and engages to serve his uncle Laban seven years for Rachel.
3941	3931	1773	Ishmael dies, aged 137 years.
3942	3929	1772	Jacob marries Leah and Rachel.
3950	3940	1764	*Deluge of Ogyges, in Boeotia and Attica, in consequence of which the latter lies waste for upwards of 200 years, till the arrival of Cecrops.
3959	3949	1763	The city of Zancle (now Messina), in Sicily, built by pirates — Erechtis begins to reign over the Chalcidians, 204 years before the Arabs got possession of that country. Julius Africanus. He is supposed by Usher to be the same with Salm, afterwards worshipped at Babylon. — Mr. Bryant thinks his name indicates him to be the same with Baccbus.
3957	3947	1757	The second dynasty of Chinese emperors, called Chang, or Shang, and afterwards Yag, or Yin, begins, and continues 634 years, under 30 emperors. [Morrison commences it in 1756, and closes it in 1119 (644 years), and states that this part of Chinese history is under great obligations to historians of subsequent times. At this early period, the people on the N. of China are spoken of with contempt and abuse. The Chinese, instead of saying they subdued the N., say they 'conquered the land of demons or devils.']
3971	3961	1743	The Hyc-soo, or Shepherd-Kings, expelled Egypt by Amosis, or Tuth-mosis.
		1740	[Osirtasen I. king of Egypt 43 years. Joseph arrives in his reign. The names and era of the 5 monarchs before Osirtasen are uncertain. This 16th dynasty, from Lower Egypt.]
3975	3965	1739	Jacob and his family, unknown to Laban, set out on their return to Canaan; Laban pursues them; but being warned of God, makes a friendly treaty with Jacob, on overtaking him, and returns. Jacob, pursuing his journey, wrestles with an angel, who changes his name to Israel — meets Esau, and is reconciled to him — and finally settles among the Shechemites in Canaan. Job is supposed to have lived about this time.
3983	3973	1731	Rape of Dinah, Jacob's daughter, which causes the destruction of Shechem and his people by Simeon and Levi.
3985	3975	1729	[*Commencement of 7 years of 'great drought' and famine in China. At the close, the king 'prayed in the stubble-grass and desert places,' and while he was praying, a heavy rain fell over a space of several hundred miles.]
3986	3976	1728	Joseph sold, by his brethren, into Egypt, at the age of 17 years.
3995	3985	1719	Joseph cast into prison by Potiphar, on a false accusation of his mistress.
3998	3988	1716	Isaac dies at the age of 180.
3999	3989	1715	Joseph interprets the king's two prophetic dreams, and is promoted to the first place in Pharaoh's house and kingdom. — The seven years of plenty begin the following year.
3001	3996	1708	The seven years of famine begin.
3007	3997	1707	Joseph's brethren go into Egypt, to purchase corn, the first time; on their return, the next year, he discovers himself to them, and invites his father to settle in Egypt, which he complies with.
3019	3999	1709	The Egyptians, having expended all their money in the purchase of corn from the king's stores, Joseph persuades them to barter their lands, and afterwards lets them out, at a perpetual rent-tax of a fifth part of their produce.
3013	3993	1701	The seven years of famine end. [Others begin them in 1703.] [1896. Amun-n-gori (?) I. reigns in Egypt. W.]
3025	3915	1689	Jacob, on his death-bed, predicts the advent of the Messiah in the tribe of Judah, and expires at the age of 147. [1896. Amun-n-gori II. reigns in Egypt 35 years. The mines of the E. desert of Egypt already worked, and the port of Aden in Philoteria (old Kossayr) probably already built for trade with Arabia. Osirtasen II. ascends the throne in 1651, commencing 17th dynasty. W.]
3079	3969	1635	Joseph foretells the egress of the Israelites from Egypt, desires to have his bones taken along with them, and dies at the age of 110, having been governor or prefect of Egypt during 80 years. — The history of the book of Genesis ends here, containing a period of 2369 years.
3096	3986	1691	[Amun-n-gori (?) III. ascends the Egyptian throne, and reigned at least 41 years. W.]
3099	3989	1615	The Ethiopians, from the banks of the Indus, settle in the vicinity of Egypt.
3107	3997	1607	The 19th dynasty begins in Egypt, under Sethos-Egyptus, or Ammessia, or Seosetris, from whom the country received the name of Egypt. This dynasty persecuted the Israelites, and appears to have been of the race of Ethiopians mentioned in the last event.
3139	3929	1569	The chronology of the Arundelian Marbles begins with the arrival of Cecrops in Attica, 25 years before the usual computation.
3139	3929	1576	Amosis Chebron (Chebron Ames). The 'new (dynasty or) king.' Ex. i:18. He founds the 18th dynasty, and reigned at least 29 years.
3140	3930	1574	Anou born.
3140	3930	1573	Pharaoh (supposed to be Rhamsees, or Ramesse-Miamum) issues a decree for drowning the Hebrew male children.
3143	3933	1571	Moses born, and, having been concealed three months by his mother, is then exposed in a basket of rushes on the banks of the river, where he is found and adopted by the king's daughter.
3158	3948	1556	Cecrops arrives in Attica, with a colony of Saites, from Egypt, and founds the kingdom of Athens, 780 years before the first Olympiad. Eusebius.
3164	3954	1550	[Amenoph (Amenoph I.) ascends the Egyptian throne. Crude brick arches used, 1840. W.]
3166	3956	1548	Reign of Deucalion at Thermopylae.
3168	3958	1546	Scamander passes from Crete into Phrygia, and begins the kingdom of Troy.
3169	3959	1545	Mephres, or Mesphra, or Mesphra Tuthmosis (Thothmes I. of monuments) ascends the throne of Egypt, and seems to have married Amessos (sister of Amunoph I.), whose reign is included in his. W.
3183	3973	1531	Moses, being come of age, refuses to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, and visits the Israelites in their affliction, kills one of the Egyptian task-masters; and, to avoid the resentment of the king, flies into Midian, where he keeps the flocks of Jethro 40 years.
3194	3984	1520	The city of Ephira, or Corinth, rebuilt. — *Pelagius reigns in Arcadia, about this time.
3198	3988	1516	*Lelix begins a kingdom in the Peloponnesus, called from him Lelegia, but afterwards Lacedaemon. [1512. Arrival of the first ship, from Egypt, in Greece. W.]
3207	3997	1507	The council of Areopagus established at Athens, on occasion of the trial of Mars, at the suit of Neptune, for the murder of Halirrhottus, a son of the latter, who had violated Alcippe, a daughter of Mars.
3209	3999	1505	[Misphra Tuthmosis, or Misphramuthosis (Thothmes II.) ascends the Egyptian throne. The reign of Amun-n-gori is included in his. Glass already known in Egypt. W.]
3211	3501	1503	Deluge of Deucalion in Thessaly. — Deucalion arrives in Attica the following year.
3215	3505	1499	Polycaon, son of Lelix, begins the kingdom of Messenia.
3217	3507	1497	Amphictyon, son of Deucalion, seizes the kingdom of Athens. — Amphictyon, son of Helen, and nephew to the preceding king of Athens, establishes the council of the Amphictyons.
			Tyre supposed to be built by Agenor the Egyptian.
3219	3509	1495	[Thummosis, or Thothmosis (Thothmes III.), ascends the throne of Egypt: in his reign, 1491, happened the Exodus, in the month Abib or Epiphi, 430 years after Abraham's arrival.]
3221	3511	1193	*Europa, daughter of Agenor, having been carried off by pirates, her three brothers, Cadmus, Phoenix, and Cilix, go in quest of her; but being unsuccessful, Cadmus settles in Boeotia, and begins the kingdom of Thebes; Phoenix settles near home, in the country called after him Phoenicia; and Cilix takes up his abode in a part of Asia Minor, named from him Cilicia. On this occasion Cadmus introduces letters into Greece.
3223	3513	1491	God appears to Moses in a burning bush, in the land of Midian, and sends him into Egypt, where he performs many miracles, and inflicts ten successive plagues on the king and his people, until he allows the Israelites to depart, in number amounting to 800,000 adults, besides children, on Tuesday, the 5th of May, which exactly completed the 430 years of sojourning. On the Monday following, the Israelites pass through the Red Sea, where Pharaoh and his host, attempting to pursue, are all drowned. About the 22d of June, the Israelites arrive in the Desert of Sin, or Sinal, where they remain nearly a year, and receive the ten commandments, with divers ceremonial statutes: the tabernacle is also set up, containing the ark of the covenant.

EPOCH IV. — FROM THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL TO THE FOUNDATION OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE; 480 YEARS.

3294	3514	1490	Lacedaemon, having married Sparta, daughter of Eurotus, king of Lelegia, builds a city, which he calls after her. His own name is also given to the kingdom.
3299	3519	1485	Danais, surnamed Arnaia, arrives in Greece, from Egypt, in the first ship ever seen in the former country; bringing his 52 daughters, better known by the name of Danaides.
3234	3524	1480	*The city of Dardania (afterwards called Troy) supposed to be built by Dardanus.
3238	3528	1456	[Amenophis (Amunoph II., son of Thothmes II.) ascends the throne of Egypt; and very young, for he is drawn at Thebes as under the tutelage of his mother. He reigned at least 34, Eratosthenes allows him 30 years. W.]
3261	3551	1453	The first Olympic games celebrated at Elis, by the Idai Dactyl.

EPOCH IV. (CONTINUED.)

3928	2532	1458	Aaron dies, at the age of 123, in the land of Moab, where Moses finishes his 5 books, and dies himself, the next year, aged 130.
3923	2523	1451	Joshua leads the Israelites through the river Jordan, into the land of Canaan, on Friday the 30th of April. The waters of the river are divided on this occasion, to afford a free passage, as those of the Red Sea had been, 40 years before, when the Israelites left Egypt. — Jericho is the first city taken by them.
3928	2528	1446	[Horus (Thothmes IV., son of A. II.) reigns in Egypt. The sphynx at the pyramids cut out of the rock by his order. W.]
3929	2529	1445	Joshua, having conquered 31 kings of the Canaanites, divides the country among the tribes of Israel, and rests from his conquests upon the sabbatical year, which commences at the autumnal equinox.
3934	2534	1439	[Rathotis (Amenoph III., son of T. IV.) ascends the throne of Egypt. He took his name A. III. some time after, apparently after his brother's retirement. He is the (supposed) Memnon of the vocal statue of Thebes; reigned apparently conjointly with his brother (whose name is omitted in the lists of kings on the monuments), perhaps Danaus (?), who went to Argos, and died 1435. The so called 'young Memnon's head' of the British Museum is of Remeses the Great. The reign of the queen Acherres, Achencheres, or Achenchres (Maut-m-abol, regency, of the monuments), is included in that of Amenoph III., her son. W.]
3938	2538	1436	Joshua dies, at the age of 110.
3931	2531	1413	*The Israelites, for their idolatry, are delivered into the power of Chushan-Rishathaim, king of Mesopotamia, who keeps them in bondage 8 years.
3934	2534	1410	The city of Ephra rebuilt, and called Corinth; about which time it is seized by Sisyphus, and made an independent kingdom.
3936	2536	1408	[Achencheres, or Chabres (Amun-men (?), son of A. III., ascends the throne of Egypt. W.]
3938	2538	1406	Minos governs with great splendor in Crete, and gives his people a code of laws, celebrated for their wisdom and equity. — The Idæi Dactyli discover iron in that island, from the accidental burning of Mount Ida. [Plut. Hesiod, &c. date its use much later, even after the Trojan war.]
3939	2539	1405	*Othniel, the first judge, delivers Israel, by defeating the forces of Chushan-Rishathaim; and gives his country rest (40 years, according to the text; or, as some critics read, in the 40th year after that given by Joshua.)
3934	2534	1390	*The tragical event of the Levite's concubine happens in Israel, which gives occasion to the destruction of almost the whole tribe of Benjamin. Jud. 19: et seq.
3929	2519	1385	[Armais, supposed to be Danaus (Osirei ?) I., son of B. I., and father of B. II., and Amunman Remeses, if they are two, which I doubt, ascends the throne of Egypt. Calculating 900 years before the time of Herodotus, the reign of Meris would fall about the time of this king, or B. C. 1360. W.]
3931	2521	1383	Ceres arrives at Athens, and instructs the people in agriculture; while her pupil Triptolemus travels through various provinces of Greece for the same purpose. On his return, he institutes the Eleusinian mysteries, in honor of his patroness.
3947	2537	1367	Janus arrives in Italy, from Thessaly, and settles with his companions on Mount Janiculum, where he reigns 36 years.
3958	2548	1356	The Eleusinian mysteries introduced at Athens, by Eumolpus, son of Musæus, frequently called the inventor of them.
3959	2549	1355	[Remeses Miamun (of the writers); Amun-mai Remeses, Remeses II., or Remeses the Great, ascends the throne of Egypt. Sesosis of Diodorus, the supposed Sesostri; whom, however, Manetho places in the 12th dynasty; perhaps the same name and name of the early hero was afterwards traditionally transferred to the later and even more renowned conqueror. The war and defeat of the Shepherd-Kings appear to have been prior to the 18th dynasty; but the expulsion of the Jews happening during that period, the accounts of these two occurrences became afterwards confounded together. Wilk.]
3964	2554	1350	Sicyon reigns in Argæia, which receives his name.
3971	2561	1343	*The Israelites, relapsing into idolatry, are enslaved by Eglon, king of Moab, 18 years.
3973	2563	1341	Troes enlarges or rebuilds his capital, and names it, after himself, Troy. The rape of Ganymedes happens the same year.
3988	2578	1326	The Isthmian games instituted.
3989	2579	1325	*Ehed, the second judge of Israel, delivers his country, and kills Eglon.
3401	2591	1313	Perseus begins the kingdom of Mycenæ, by the division of that of Argos, of which Mycenæ takes the most considerable share.
3407	2597	1307	The Olympic games celebrated by Pelops. About the same time Phocus begins the kingdom of Phocis.
3409	2599	1305	*The 3d servitude of the Israelites, under Jabin, king of Canaan; 90 years.
3425	2715	1289	[Amenophis, Ptahmen Thmoiofep (?), or Thmoiofep-ho (?) of the monuments, Phoron, i. e. Pharaoh, of Herodotus; and Sesosis II. of Diodorus ascend the Egyptian throne. W.]
3429	2719	1285	*Deborah, the prophetess, and third judge of Israel, and Barak, defeat the Canaanites under Sisera.
3430	2720	1284	The Siculi emigrate from Italy, and settle in the island of Trinacria, from them called Sicily, about three generations before the Trojan war; — some writers will have the first colony to arrive in Sicily in the year 1294 B. C.; and a second in 1264. [Setboe (Ptahmen-se-Ptah) marries the princess Tasiri, and in her right ascends the throne of Egypt; commencing the 19th dynasty. W.]
3451	2741	1263	The Calydonian hunt takes place about this time.
3459	2749	1255	Jason and the Argonauts sail for Colchis, 79 years before the fall of Troy; or, according to some, in the year 1226 B. C.
3462	2752	1252	Adrastus, king of Argos, celebrates the Pythian games.
3469	2759	1245	The city of Tyre rebuilt. [Rameses (Osirei II., or Osiri Men-ptah) ascends the throne of Egypt.]
3471	2761	1243	*The 4th servitude of the Israelites, under the Midianites, for 7 years.
3478	2768	1236	The Midianites routed by Gideon, surnamed Jerubbabel, fourth judge of Israel. [Amenoph (Osirita ?) Remeses, (?) Amun-mai) ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3479	2769	1235	Evander conducts a colony of Arcadians into Italy, and brings the Greek alphabet with him. He reigned over a district round Mounts Aventine and Palatine.
3480	2770	1234	Abimelech, son of Gideon, usurps the title of king over part of Israel for 3 years.
3481	2771	1233	Rameses (Remese III.), Miamun, or Amunmni, ascends the Egyptian throne.
3489	2779	1225	Theseus collects the 12 cities of Attica into one, establishes a democracy, and renews the Isthmian games. Some say this happened in 1231 B. C.
3496	2786	1218	*Carthage supposed to be founded by a colony of Tyrians.
3498	2788	1216	The Theban war of the seven heroes, occasioned by the quarrel between Eteocles and his brother Polyneices, joint sovereigns of Thebes.
3501	2791	1213	Hercules celebrates the Olympic games.
3508	2798	1206	War of the Epigoni, sons and relatives of the seven heroes who had fallen before the walls of Thebes.
3509	2799	1205	The Amazons, invading Attica, are defeated by Theseus.
3513	2803	1201	*Rape of Helen, daughter of Tyndareus, king of Lacedæmon, by Theseus. She is afterwards recovered by her brothers Castor and Pollux.
3516	2806	1198	*The 5th servitude of the Israelites, under the Philistines and Ammonites, 18 years.
3519	2809	1195	Amenemes (Remeses IV.) ascends the Egyptian throne.
3526	2816	1188	Tyndareus marries Helen to Menelaus, an exile prince of Messenia, and resigns his throne to him.
3528	2818	1186	Helen elopes from Sparta with Alexander Paris, son of Priam, king of Troy. Menelaus invites the sovereigns of Greece to avenge his injury.
3530	2820	1184	[Thooris, the supposed Polybus (called on the monuments Remeses V.), ascends the throne of Egypt. W.]
3534	2824	1180	Beginning of the siege of Troy; or, rather, of the invasion of Phrygia Minor.
3535	2825	1179	*Jephthah, the seventh judge of Israel, defeats the Ammonites, &c. (For an account of his rash vow, see Jud. 11:29-40.)
3538	2828	1176	[Wo-yih reigns in China from 1188 to 1184, a bad man. He 'made idols, and called them celestial gods, and placed servants to move them. At this the real gods were angry, and he was struck dead by thunder while hunting.']
3544	2834	1170	Troy taken and burned in the night, between the 7th and 8th, or 23d and 24th of the month Thargelion, 408 years before the first Olympiad. Apollodorus. (The Arundelian Marbles place this event in 1209 B. C.) [Qu. Was Troy a name like Teor, or Tyre, and founded by those enterprising people (Edomites ?) who founded Tyre, Carthage, &c. If so, as it is well known that the Tyrians and Greeks long contended for the trade of the north (i. e. the Archipelago and Black Seas, the former at last yielding it to the Greeks, and stretching out into the far west), perhaps Troy was built to secure the Dardanelles passage, and destroyed to secure it to their rivals. Were the early civilized Thracians the relics of such colonies of Tyrians? Ed.]

3599	2889	1115	About this time, the use of the mariner's compass is said to have been known in China.
3602	2892	1112	[Reign of Chow closes, and with it the Shang or Yin dynasty. He was of infamous celebrity for his follies, lewdness, and crimes. With Ta-ke, his wife, he gave himself to unrestrained sensuality and extravagance; invented naked lascivious dances; built, in 10 years, a stage 1000 cubits high and a mile broad; laid out vast gardens; formed menageries; and built large granaries to feed these and the idle crowd; made a lake of wine, suspended meat on the trees around, and got together a vast number of naked men and women for shameful debaucheries. The general contempt this excited was cruelly punished. Pe-kan acquired immortal fame by falling a martyr to the hopeless task of reproving bad kings. At last Woo-wang, solemnly appealing to Heaven, endeavored to rid the world of the tyrant, and defeated his army of 700,000 men; on which Chow fled to his stage, arrayed himself sumptuously, adorned with pearls and gems, and burnt himself to death. The capital was in Homan; the Chinese 'gradually obtained a residence in the middle country,' and hence called themselves Chung-kwo, 'Middle Nation;' to the E. of them was a nation of 'foreigners,' more 'numerous and stronger;' the Chinese were 'small and feeble,' say their historians.]
3604	2894	1110	[Remeses XI. ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3609	2899	1105	[Close of the reign of Woo-wang, founder of the Chinese dynasty, Chow, commencing 1112, ending 943. In 1105, China had 23 states; in 700, 41 states.]
3610	2900	1104	The Heraclids return to the Peloponnesus.
3612	2902	1102	On the death of Aristodemus, his twin-sons, Procles and Eurysthenes, reign jointly at Lacedemon; which double succession is continued for upwards of 800 years.
3613	2903	1101	The 3d Chinese dynasty (called Tchou) begins, and continues 855 years, under 35 emperors. [Morrison says, 1112.]
3618	2908	1096	Samuel obtains his first victory over the Philistines at Ebenezer.
3619	2909	1095	The Israelites desire a king, and Samuel anoints Saul. [Amumai-Ponei (?) in Egypt. W.]
3626	2916	1088	The kingdom of Sicyon overthrown by the Heraclids, and included in that of Argos, or of Lacedemon.
3634	2924	1080	[Amunnezes (?) ascends the Egyptian throne; reigns till about 1068. W.]
3644	2934	1070	Royalty abolished at Athens; the government of archons begins, under Medon.
3650	2940	1064	David slays Goliath, the Philistine champion. — The next year, Samuel is directed to anoint him to be king of Israel, instead of Saul.
3651	2941	1063	Samuel anoints David privately, by divine appointment.
3656	2946	1058	The Pelasgi are the second nation that acquires the maritime power of the Mediterranean.
3659	2949	1055	Saul, worsted in battle by the Philistines, consults the witch of Endor, and kills himself the next day. — David begins to reign over a part of Israel; Ishbosheth, son of Saul, reigning over the remainder.
3666	2956	1048	On the death of Ishbosheth, David succeeds to the whole kingdom of Israel; takes Jerusalem from the Jebusites, and makes it the seat of his government.
3670	2960	1044	The Ionians migrate from Greece to Asia Minor, 60 years after the return of the Heraclids.
3672	2962	1042	[Chow, the great Chinese historian, and inventor of the seal character.]
3680	2970	1034	David, falling into the sins of adultery and murder, is reproved by Nathan, and repents.
3691	2981	1023	Abalom, son of David, excites a rebellion in Israel, and is killed by Joab.
3701	2991	1013	[Solomon marries one of the Pharaohs' daughter. The Egyptian succession is very doubtful, from 1110 to 978. W.]
3702	2992	1012	Solomon lays the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of his reign, 480 years after the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. 1 K. 6:1.

EPOCH V.—FROM THE FOUNDATION OF SOLOMON'S TEMPLE, TO THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OLYMPIADS BY CORÆBUS; 256 YEARS.

3710	3000	1004	The temple of Jerusalem finished, and dedicated on Friday, the 30th of October, in the 12th year of Solomon's reign.

3718	3008	996	Solomon prepares a fleet in the Red Sea, which sails to Ophir.
3722	3012	992	Solomon finishes his palace, which, with the temple, had occupied twenty years of his reign. The queen of Sheba visits him soon afterwards.
3738	3018	986	The city of Samos, in the island so called, and Utica, on the coast of Africa, are built about this time.
3736	3026	978	[Pseonchis (Sheshonk I., Shishak of SS.) ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3739	3029	975	Separation of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah. — Jeroboam sets up calves at Dan and Bethel, to prevent his subjects going to worship at Jerusalem.
3743	3033	971	Shishak, king of Egypt, invades Judah, takes Jerusalem, and plunders the temple and palace.
3769	3059	945	[Osorthon (Osorkon I., Zerah) ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3773	3063	941	Zerah, the Ethiopian, invading Judah with a million of men, is defeated by Aza, in the valley of Zephathah.
3774	3064	940	Benhadad I., king of Syria, takes several cities from Baasha, king of Israel.
3788	3078	926	Lycurgus, the Spartan legislator, born 150 years before the first Olympiad.
3789	3079	925	[Taceollothe (Tatelothe) ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3790	3080	924	Omri transfers the seat of the kingdom of Israel from Tirzah to Samaria.
3798	3088	916	The Rhodians are the 4th maritime power in the Mediterranean, and hold it 93 years.
3808	3096	908	[Osorkon II. commences the 22d Egyptian dynasty. W.] [Homer lives 908, some say 844.]
3814	3104	900	Justin Martyr and others here and the Assyrian empire; but Eusebius, whom we have mostly followed, 80 years later.
3817	3107	897	Ahab, king of Israel, slain in battle by the Syrians; on which the Moabites revolt, who had been tributary from the days of David.
3818	3108	896	Elijah the prophet translated to heaven.
3821	3111	893	The Phrygians are the 5th maritime power in the Mediterranean.
3824	3114	890	[Sheshonk II. ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
3830	3120	884	Lycurgus, after travelling 10 years, establishes his laws in Lacedemon. — Iphitus, king of Elis, Lycurgus, regent of Lacedemon, and Cleosthenes, restore the Olympic games at Elis, 106 years prior to the vulgar era of the first Olympiad.
3836	3126	878	Hazael, the Syrian general, having put Benhadad to death, reigns in his stead, according to the prophecy of Elisha, 2 K. 8:13.

EPOCH VI. — FROM THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE OLYMPIADS BY CORREBUS, TO THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS BY CYRUS; 240 YEARS.

The Olympic games revived by Cornebus.
 Uziah, king of Judah, struck with leprosy for presuming to offer incense.
 *Romulus and Remus born.
 Phul, king of Assyria, invades Israel, and receives 1000 talents to depart in peace. [Chinese history records 'intercourse (by China) with the 8 barbarous tribes called 'Theen-chah' (India).]
 Belesis, or Nanib, prefect of Babylon, makes himself independent.
 Phul subjugates Media. [The custom of avoiding, as sacred, the name a person called himself by in worshipping, existed, as it does still, in China.]
 Theopompus establishes the ephori at Lacedemon.
 Isaiah begins to prophesy at Jerusalem, and continues his exhortations for upwards of 60 years. Nahum began his ministry the preceding year, and Micah three years after.
 Corinth becomes a republic under annual prytanes, Automenes being the first. Some writers place this event 22 years earlier.
 The archonship at Athens reduced to 10 years' duration.
 The Milesians are the ninth maritime power in the Mediterranean.
 Era of the city of Rome, according to Varro, on the 12th of the calends of May, or April 30.
 Daicles is the first victor crowned at the Olympic games.
 Rape of the Sabines, by the followers of Romulus.
 After a war of three years, the Romans and Sabines agree to unite, and Tatius, king of the latter, reigns jointly with Romulus over both people.
 The era of Nabonassar begins.
 The first Messenian war begins, and continues 19 years. — The Lacedemonians bind themselves with an oath not to return home till their enemies are conquered.
 The Carians have the command of the Mediterranean.
 Syracuse, in Sicily, founded by a colony from Corinth, led thither by Archias.
 Habakkuk, the prophet, flourished about this time.
 [Sebechon, or Sevechus (Shebek), either before or after Sabaco, 778. W.]
 The Lacedemonians, defeated by Aristodemus, the Messenian general, and despairing of being ever freed from their oath, send word to their wives and daughters to recruit the population by promiscuous amours.
 The first Messenian war ended, by the capture of Ithomi.
 Alcidas, and a colony of Messenians, settle at Rhegium, on the south-west coast of Italy.
 The Chinese empire divided into principalities, or viceroynalties.
 Samaria taken after a three years' siege, and the kingdom of Israel finished by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, who carries the ten tribes into captivity.
 First eclipse of the moon recorded.
 Shalmaneser besieges Tyre for about five years, without success.
 [Teraces, or Tarchus (Tehrak), Tearchon of Strabo, Tirhakah of SS., ascends the Egyptian throne, and makes one of the 3 kings of the Ethiopian dynasty, 25th. Sethos of Herodotus was his contemporary, and reigned at Memphis. On the death of Sethos, 13 chiefs seize the kingdom. 690.]
 Henekiah's life prolonged. — Gela, in Sicily, founded by a colony from Rhodes and Crete.
 The army of Sennacherib, 185,000 strong, destroyed in one night before Jerusalem, by a blast (supposed to be the scorching wind assid).
 The Roman calendar corrected by Numa Pompilius, who also institutes the Salian order of priesthood.
 Deioceus the Mede delivers his country from the Assyrian yoke, and builds the city of Ecbatana.
 The Parthenes (i. e. sons of virgins), expelled from Sparta, settle in Calabria, where they build Tarantum.
 The city of Corcyra built by the Corinthians.
 Deioceus assumes the regal title in Media, and reigns 53 years.
 Isaiah supposed to have been put to death by Manasseh, king of Judah, by being sawn asunder.
 Bethulia, a city of Judah, besieged by the Assyrians, and delivered by Judith, who kills their general Holofernes.
 [19 nomarchs reign in Memphis, Egypt, after a 2 years' anarchy, for 15 years. W.]
 The second Messenian war begins, and continues 14 years.
 The office of archon, at Athens, made annual, Creon being the first.
 The Messenians defeated, through the treachery of Aristocrater, king of Arcadia, whom the Lacedemonians had bribed.
 Assaradinus, or Esar-haddon, king of Assyria, takes Babylon, and makes it the capital of his dominions. — The chariot-races added to the Olympic games.
 Deioceus extends the empire of the Medes to the river Halys.
 Manasseh, king of Judah, taken prisoner to Babylon, for two years.
 The Lesbians acquire the command of the Mediterranean, and hold it about 69 years.
 The Carian festivals instituted at Sparta.
 Terpander adds three strings to the lyre.
 The second Messenian war concludes with the surrender of Iria, after a siege of eleven years.
 Many of the conquered Messenians retire from the Peloponnese, and settle in Sicily, where they seize the ancient city of Zancle, and give it the name of Messana (now Messina).
 The combat between the three Horatii and three Curiatii.
 On the death of Assaradinus, Babylon and Assyria again become separate kingdoms.
 The city of Alba-Longa destroyed by the Romans.
 [Psammetichus (Psamatik I., Psameticus I.) ascends the Egyptian throne. Stepinathis, Nechepes, and Nechao I., are between him and Tirhakah. After the death of Sethos, contemporary with T., it appears that the 13 chiefs seized the kingdom; but as Neco I., the father of Psamatik I., was put to death by Sabaco, it is probable that these 3 kings were contemporaries of the 25th dynasty (from Sabaco to Tirhakah). Psamatik I. is the 4th king of the Saite dynasty.]
 Cypselus usurps the government of Corinth, for 30 years.
 About this period the Cimbric emigrate from Germany, and settle in Asia Minor.

[Psammitichus, Psammis, or Psammis (Psamatik II.), ascends the Egyptian throne.] Daniel interprets the first dream of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. Jehoiachin, king of Judah, sent in irons to Babylon, by Nebuchadnezzar, who pillages the temple of all its riches, and sets up Zedekiah to be king. Cyrus expels the Scythians from Upper Asia. Epimenides, of Crete, the first builder of temples in Greece, flourishes. [Vaphros, or Apries (Psamatik III.), ascends the throne of Egypt; the Hophra of the SS.; but this is not certain. W.] Solon publishes his law at Athens. Thales of Miletus, after travelling into Egypt, returns to Greece and calculates eclipses, gives general views of the universe, and maintains the unity of the Godhead, as he had received it from the Egyptian priests. Anaximander, his scholar, invents maps, globes, and, as some writers assert, the signs of the zodiac; though it is more than probable that they had been long before known both to the Egyptians and Chaldeans. The Pythian games first celebrated at Delphi. The war between Cyrus, king of Media, and Halyattes II., king of Lydia, begins, and continues six years. The city of Jerusalem, after a siege of 18 months, taken by Nebuchadnezzar, on the 19th June. The temple of Jerusalem burned to the ground, on the 7th day of the 5th month. A battle upon the river Halys, between Cyrus and Halyattes, interrupted by a total eclipse of the sun, on the 28th of May, as predicted by Thales, which brings the war to a conclusion, both armies retiring under dismal forebodings. Corinth, delivered from its tyrants, becomes a free republic. The Isthmian games restored. Money first coined at Rome, by Tarquinius Priscus. The Megarensian war. The city of Tyre taken by Nebuchadnezzar, after a siege of 13 years. Apries, king of Egypt, dethroned by Nebuchadnezzar. Nebuchadnezzar sets up the golden image; Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, cast into the furnace for refusing to worship it, come out unhurt; Daniel interprets the king's second dream. Amosis, or Amasis (Ames Neites), ascends the throne of Egypt. He was not low born, as Herodotus supposes, but of a good family; an illustrious person, says Diod.; and he married the daughter of Psamatik III. He was a man of rank in the military caste. W.] Nebuchadnezzar becomes insane, and resides in the desert seven years, according to the prediction of Daniel. Egypt recovers its independence. The Nemean games restored. — Phalaris, tyrant of Agriguntum. The Etrurians conquered by the Romans. The first census at Rome, 188 years from its foundation, when there appeared to be 84,700 citizens. Nebuchadnezzar restored, but survives only a few months. The first comedy at Athens, performed on a movable scaffold by Sesarion and Dolon. The kingdom of Persia begins under Cyrus, grandson of Astyages (or Ahasuerus, as some suppose), king of the Medes. Pisistratus first usurps the government of Athens. Cyrus, deposing his grandfather, becomes sovereign of the Medes and Persians. The temple of Apollo, at Delphi, burned by the Pisistratids, or sons of Pisistratus. The kingdom of Lydia ends, on the defeat of Croesus by Cyrus. The Phocians, forsaking their native country, settle in Gaul, where they build the city of Marsille. Babylon taken by Cyrus, the same night in which Belshazzar (or Nabonadius) was surprised in the midst of his revelry by the hand writing against the wall of his palace. Darius the Mede (supposed to be the deposed Astyages) is made viceroy of Babylon, and holds that office about two years. Cyrus, master of all Asia, issues a decree for the restoration of the Jews to their own country, and for the rebuilding of the walls and temple of Jerusalem.

Era of the Persian monarchy. — 48,360 Jews, besides proselytes and servants, to the number of 7237, return to Judea, under Zerubbabel, and Joshua, the priest. Thespis, the inventor of tragedy, performs his first piece at Athens, on a wagon. — The Arundelian Marbles place this a year sooner. The foundation of the second temple laid at Jerusalem, on the 29th of April. — Tarquinius Superbus, the last king of Rome, begins to reign the same year. Cyrus marches against the Scythians, and next year loses his life in a battle against Thomyris, queen of the Massagets. — About the same time, the Samaritans begin to interrupt the Jews in the building of the temple. [From this period, say 544, to about 400, the principles of the ruling kings of China are thought to be the parent, and are quoted with veneration as 'the royal doctrines, the principles of the ancient kings.'] The Jews admonished and encouraged to proceed with the temple, by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. A public library first founded at Athens, and learning encouraged. [Psammithes, or Psammis, ascends the throne of Egypt. W.] Cambyses (Cambyses of the Eg. hieroglyphics), the Persian, son and successor of Cyrus, conquers Egypt. Darius Hystaspis (the Ahasuerus of Esther) elected to the throne of Persia, on the death of the impostor Smerdis. [Egypt revokes. Nabonadius is his Eg. hierog. name.] Darius issues a second decree for rebuilding Jerusalem and its temple. The temple at Jerusalem finished, on the 10th of March: the passover celebrated on the 15th of April. Babylon revolts from Darius, for two years. The tyranny of the Pisistratids abolished at Athens, by the assistance of the Lacedæmonians, and a democracy established. Tarquin and his family expelled Rome, on occasion of the rape of Lucretia; and the consular government begins, on the 26th of February (the Regifugium of the Roman calendar); Junius Brutus and Tarquinius Collatinus, the husband of Lucretia, being the first consuls. The first alliance between the Romans and Carthaginians. — Sybaris destroyed by those of Crotona robbing their army of 300,000 with one less than 100,000. The second census taken at Rome, and there appears to have been 130,000 citizens. Megabyrus, the Persian lieutenant in Europe, conquers Thrace and Macedonia. — Ptolemy, king of Egypt, makes war against the Romans, as do the Sabines, in favor of the restoration of Tarquin. Sardis taken and burned by the Athenians, which occasions the Persian invasion of Greece. The lesser triumph, called Ovation, begun at Rome, by Ptolemy entering the city with a myrtle crown. The Ionians, after a revolt, subdued by the Persians, and the city of Miletus destroyed. The Roman people refusing to obey the senate and consuls, Lucius is appointed dictator, and invested with absolute authority for six months. — The Saturnalia instituted. — 150,700 citizens. Tarquinius Superbus dies at Cuma, whither he had retired on the close of the Latin war, at the age of 59, fifteen years after his expulsion from Rome, prior to which he had reigned 26 years. The populace of Rome, being discontented with the aristocracy, or patricians, retire to Mount Sacra, and threaten to build a new city; but by the persuasion of Menenius Agrippa, who invents the fable of 'the Belly and Limbs,' they return, and are further appeased by the appointment of popular tribunes. Coriolanus banished from Rome. — Gelo usurps the government of Syracuse. The Persians defeated at Marathon, by Miltiades the Athenian. Coriolanus advances with an army of Volscians against Rome, but withdraws at the entreaty of his mother. Egypt revolts from the Persians, 4 years. — Darius makes Artabazus king of Pontus. The first agrarian law proposed at Rome, by Spurius Cassius. — Æschylus, at the age of 30, gains the first prize of tragedy, at Athens. Spurius Cassius thrown from the Tarpeian rock, after having been three times consul, for aspiring to the sovereignty. The Volsci and Æqui subdued. Xerxes (called in the Eg. hierog. 'Nabonadius'), king of Persia, recovers Egypt, and instructs the government to his brother Artabanus. — Aristides the Just banished from Athens. Quæstors first appointed at Rome for collecting the revenues and managing the public treasury. — An eruption of Mount Etna.

 - 10 Tiberius marches against the Germans; and, in the course of this and the following year, reduced the Germans again under the Roman yoke; upon which a profound peace takes place in the whole Roman world.
 - 11 Tiberius, in consequence of his very important services, is made by Augustus his colleague in the empire, both in the civil and military government, August 28.
 - 12 Imperial edict against diviners and astrologers.
 - 13 Augustus Cæsar is again appointed emperor for ten years longer, the last prorogation expiring the end of this year.
 - 14 Death of Augustus Cæsar (in the consulship of Sextus Pompeius and Sextus Apuleius) at Nola, August 19, being 76 years of age, all but 35 days. — There are four epochs from which historians date the years of this emperor's reign. The first is that of the second year of the Julian era, or the 709th of Rome; when, after the death of Julius Cæsar, coming from Macedonia into Italy, he took upon him the rank of emperor, without making any change in the republic, and assembled by private authority some veteran soldiers. The second epoch is the 3d year of the Julian era, or the 711th of Rome, when, after the death of the two consuls Hirtius and Pansa, he entered into the consulate with Q. Pedius, Sept. 22; or when, on the 27th of November following, he was declared triumvir with Mark Antony and Emilius Lepidus. The 3d epoch is the third of September, A. U. C. 723, and the 15th of the Julian era, that is to say, on the day of the battle of Actium. The 4th epoch is the following year, when, after the death of Antony and Cleopatra, he entered triumphantly into Alexandria, the 29th of August, or the first day of the Egyptian year. Thus Augustus, according to the 1st epoch, reigned fifty-eight years, five months, and four days. This is the epoch which Josephus appears to have followed. According to the 2d epoch, Augustus reigned fifty-five years, ten months, and twenty-eight days, if we reckon from the time in which he was first made consul; or fifty-five years, eight months, and twenty-two days, from his becoming one of the triumviri. It is from one of these two periods that Suetonius, Eusebius, Epiphanius, and some others, compute the fifty-six years which they assign to this emperor. But the most common mode of computing the years of the reign of Augustus is, from

A. D.

- the battle of Actium, from which time he lived and reigned forty-four years, all but thirteen days. — Tiberius Nero Caesar succeeds Augustus in the empire, August 19. — Death of Julia, daughter of Augustus, in the sixteenth year of her exile. She was banished by her father, on the charge of vicious and irregular conduct.

PREFACE.

MUCH light may be thrown on the symbolical language of Scripture by a careful collation of the writings of the prophets with each other; for the symbolical language of the prophets is almost a science in itself. None can fully comprehend the depth, sublimity, and force of their writings, who are not thoroughly acquainted with the peculiar and appropriate imagery they were accustomed to use. This is the main key to many of the prophecies, and without knowing how to apply it, the interpreter will often in vain essay to discover their hidden treasures. (See Vanmildert's Lectures, p. 240.)

The author of the present work has been content to consider symbols in the same light as emblems, though their meaning be somewhat distinct; his whole object being to throw light on some of the more obscure passages of Scripture, in which the symbolical language occurs, especially as symbols do not uniformly preserve the same signification, but are representatives of different subjects, according to the diversity of their properties and aspects. Thus iron, viewed merely as a metal difficult of fusion, denotes strength or power—when applied to the disposition, betokens stubbornness—and to the soil or ground, refers to its infertility; and so in numerous other cases; whereas the subject to which the symbolical term is affixed must be viewed in its connection and immediate reference before its signification can be thoroughly ascertained.

Nor is it less to be observed, that the same symbol is employed to point out very different and even opposite persons or characters. Thus the serpent is generally the symbol of Satan, but it is also represented as the pattern of wisdom or caution; and the brazen serpent is a well-known type of Christ, being so alluded to by the Savior Himself. This mode of application is to be accounted for, by considering the various properties which any creature or thing is commonly supposed to possess, and by selecting the evil properties to picture out evil persons, and the good properties the reverse. For though among Christians the serpent and the tempter are generally identified, yet among heathen nations that reptile has often been viewed as the symbol of deity, and in the Egyptian hieroglyphics as emblematic of eternity.

Though the subject of sacred symbols has been already treated of by some, yet the number of writers in this department of theology is hitherto comparatively small. The reason of this may be, that, in order to illustrate the symbolical language properly, a very extensive acquaintance with ancient literature is requisite. The subject involves in it mythology, hieroglyphics, Oriental customs; in short, all the learning of Egypt and the East. To such endowments the present writer makes no pretension. It presented itself to him as a branch of study that might be profitably occupied as an exercise of the faculties, and as leading to various interesting and instructive inquiries. Had he possessed better resources, the work might have been proportionately improved. But his predecessors in this line of investigation were few; and had he not made a liberal, indeed an unreserved use of Daubuz's Dictionary, his own gleanings in this field of research must have been very scanty. The principal writers on the subject of symbols are as follows: Pierius in Hieroglyphica; Pierre L'Anglois, Discours des Hieroglyphes; Vitrings de Theologia Symbolica; Horrell Institutiones Theologiae Typicae Emblematica; Ewaldi Emblemata Sacra; Daubuz's Symbolical Dictionary. Other works no doubt exist, especially in the literature of Germany, and some of them possibly superior to those just named; but they are unknown in England; at least the author has in vain ransacked numerous catalogues to find them.

It is an observation of Maimonides, that 'he who would understand all that the prophets have said, must particularly apply himself to the study of the parabolic, metaphorical, and enigmatical parts of Scripture.' It has evidently seemed good to the great Author of revelation to clothe the mysteries of divine doctrine and prediction under the veil of emblems and figures—a mode which suited the genius of the Hebrew people and the nations of the East in general; on which account we find the books of the O. T., especially, filled with allegories of various kinds. The Egyptians appear to have been the earliest cultivators of this species of composition, and in this the Jews were rather imitators than originals. That this was a part of the wisdom of Egypt, in which Moses excelled, is suggested by Philo, in his Life of Moses, by Clements of Alexandria, in his Stromata, and by many others. That the Chaldeans also were addicted to the use of emblems and allegories, appears from some ancient writers, for whom, see Stanley's History of Philosophy. The Syrians and Phœnicians are affirmed to have prosecuted the same study, according to Jerome, Josephus, Eusebius, &c.

The whole of the Levitical service was, as is allowed by all, an adoration of the events, the doctrines, or the spiritual worship of the new dispensation, consisting of various figures, so as to deserve the name which Paul gives it, 1 Co. 10. 7, 'the wisdom of God in a mystery,' or as described in He. 10. 1, 'a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things.' Wherefore Abarbanel, Abenezra, Maimonides, and other judicious Jewish interpreters, have sought in the sacrifices and rites of the O. T., the images of future and spiritual things. Our Savior and his apostles use the same forms of speaking which the writers of the O. T. employed; and Buxtorf and Saubert have showed that some of the parables which Jesus uttered, in his addresses to the people, are to be found in the Talmud. Paul, on the other hand, has borrowed many of his allusions from the Pagan mysteries, the Grecian games, the Roman customs, and the like.

The wisdom of God wonderfully appears in making choice of this manner of revealing his will. For symbols, allegories, and metaphors, greatly sharpen the human intellect, afford food for serious meditations, and allure the mind to spiritual exercises.* Images thus borrowed from nature and art, from antiquity and from periods less remote, from national customs and religious rites, present a vast field of analogy, leading the faculties into a habit of comparing and examining, till every object becomes more or less fruitful of instruction. The student, being at length convinced that all this imagery is only a vehicle for conveying sublime and abstract truths, feels himself divested of many prejudices, and delivered from those false and absurd conceptions which he had previously formed respecting the nature, perfections, and operations of the Deity. Those anthropomorphic notions which he had before entertained, in consequence of reading familiarly of the divine hand, and arm, and eye—of the anger and repentance of God—of the cup of his wrath—of his locomotion—and all those other ideas which seem to limit ubiquity and circumscribe infinity, as well as to impute to the All-Perfect men human weaknesses—are laid aside as unworthy and unworthy to the Supreme Spirit. Neither can such a reader be deceived when he is informed of celestial nuptials, of sitting at table with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, so as to figure to himself carnal delights, when only spiritual joys are intended. An answer, too, is thus afforded to the sneers and cavils of infidels and scoiologists, who ridicule the language of Scripture, because it employs images drawn from common life; whereas this employment of the symbolical and figurative style, when rightly understood, constitutes much of the sublimity, gravity, and richness of the sacred volume. Had every thing in Scripture been dryly literal and plainly didactic, the Bible would have wanted half its charms.

It must, however, be owned, that there are a luxuriant and unvaried imagination must have no license. The symbols are not to be interpreted venially or applied rashly; all must be under the guidance of a sober, clear, and pious judgment, afraid of giving forth that as divine truth which has its origin only in human fancy. As the priest approached the altar of old, not with a light step or giddy thoughts, but with the awe and solemnity which his office inspired, so we must investigate the meaning of the sacred emblems under deep impressions of the importance of divine truth.

Nor is the subject easily exhausted. The study of theology resolves itself into many parts, and the subdivision of labor is as useful here as in common sciences. What has been done for the elucidation of the symbolical language before now, as well as what is here attempted to be done, will still leave a vast plain to be traversed by others, where a harvest, rather than mere gleanings, may be gathered. A student taking the books of Moses only; another, the didactic parts of Scripture; a third, the Prophets; a fourth, the New Testament, would each find full and varied employment. The union of all their labors would hardly suffice to illustrate the mystical parts of revelation.

It may be mentioned here, that the term symbol was anciently employed for several purposes. It was customary to call the apostles' creed a symbol, from συμβολαίς, to throw or cast together, as if the apostles had each thrown in his article of belief to compose it—a name completely disapproved by Lord King. The term was also applied to military watchwords or signs, by which the soldiers of an army could distinguish each other; so that the term in that sense corresponded to the Latin adversarius. But the most frequent application of it was to the rites of the heathen religion, where those who were initiated in their mysteries, and admitted to the knowledge of their peculiar services, which were concealed from the greatest part of the idolatrous multitude, had certain signs or marks, called symbola, delivered to them, and, on declaration of these, were admitted, without scruple, in any temple, to the secret worship and rites of that god whose symbols they had received. These symbols were of two sorts, mute or vocal, concerning which those who would inquire further, may have recourse to Clements Alexandrinus, to Ambrosius, to Julius Firmicus Maternus, and other ancient writers.

Some singular remarks respecting symbols appear to be contained in Dr. Stukely's account of Abury, a temple of the Druids, in North Wiltshire. But by far the most ingenious account of the origin and use of hieroglyphical symbols is that given by the learned and acute Dr. Warburton, in his celebrated work, entitled 'The Divine Legation of Moses,' in which he has considered the subject at large, and has dissipated much of the darkness that previously rested upon it. An abstract of his reasoning may be seen in the Works of the Learned, for Sept. 1741, art. 14, and at the close of vol. 3 of Dr. Macknight's Commentary on the Apostolic Epistles. Dr. Warburton observes, that the tropical symbol sometimes assumed the form of a riddle, which in Scripture is called a dark saying, and he produces an example of it from Ex. 17. 9, &c., which the reader will find illustrated in the following work, under the article Eagle.

Considerable use, in the illustration of symbols, has been made by former authors, of the works of the oneirocritics, or interpreters of dreams—an art of very high antiquity, and of which Scripture carries the practice up to the time of Joseph, who interpreted the dream of Pharaoh. Dreams were considered as speculative or allegorical: the first is that which represents a plain and direct picture of the event predicted; the second, an oblique one, or a tropical and symbolical image of it. The latter is that kind only which needs an interpreter. If a man dreamed of a dragon, the oneirocritics assured him it signified majesty; where of a serpent, a disease; of a viper, money; of a cat, adultery; of a porcupine, impious persons, &c. What foundation these interpreters had for their system it is not easy to say; but it must have been something more than the working of each man's private imagination, for their customers would require a settled analogy for the basis of their deciphering, and they would as naturally fly to some confessed authority to support their sentence. This authority is conceived to have been the symbolic hieroglyphics; and as the gods were believed to have been the inventors of hieroglyphic learning, so it was natural to suppose, that these gods, who, in their opinion, sent dreams likewise, had employed the same manner of expression in both revelations.

Amidst the vast number of Scripture passages noticed or referred to in this work, the author was at a loss how to proceed. Had he simply referred to them by chapter and verse, it is much to be feared, through the haste or indolence of readers, that many would have been overlooked. Had he, on the other hand, quoted them all, it would have greatly swelled the book. He has therefore tried to steer a middle course, and most of those he has quoted are expressed differently from the common version.

The references to Scripture and to profane authors are also generally contrived so as to avoid the too frequent introduction of Hebrew or Greek characters, which would have rendered the work repulsive to the English reader, as well as have increased the expense of publication.

* The reader will doubtless require a profounder reason for this wonderful structure of God's Word. How could the Almighty communicate his truths to man, except in such natural clothing as suited human conceptions? The Infinite must, so to speak, clothe itself with the finite. Ed.

† Some ancient and modern, as is well known, contend for a fixed, irrevocable rule of analogy between things natural and things spiritual—but how to come at this rule? Ed.

SYMBOLICAL LANGUAGE OF SCRIPTURE.

ABY

ALT

ABYSS. Abyss literally signifies any great depth, and generally a mass of very deep waters. Symbolically, it may be understood of a hidden and confused multitude of persons. According to the Jews, the abyss was a place under the earth, in the most internal parts of it, and was thought to be a great receptacle of waters, as a reservoir to furnish all the springs or rivers. And this opinion was held by Plato, Homer, Seneca, and others, as well as by the Egyptians.

In Ge. 7:11, it is called the great deep, by way of eminence; or that vast body of waters which is conceived to exist in the hollow sphere or womb of earth, whence it was rought forth at the universal deluge.

Is. 51:10, 'Art thou not it that dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep?' i. e. of that sea whose waters communicated with the great deep. This circumstance, as Parkhurst observes, greatly heightens the miracle.

Is. 44:27. What in the Seventy is abyss, is in the Hebrew deep. This refers to the method by which Cyrus took Babylon, viz. by laying the bed of the Euphrates dry, as mentioned by Xenophon and others. The same event is noticed in similar terms by Jer. 1:38 and 51:36. A parallel passage, in relation to Egypt, occurs in Is. 19:5, where the exhaustion of the country and its resources by foreign conquerors seems to be pointed out. These conquerors were Nebuchadnezzar and the Persian kings, whose yoke was very grievous.

Lu. 8:31, the term deep should be rendered abyss, as Campbell justly observes. The sea, or deep, is expressed by a different word, o βάθος. That the sea is not meant here, is evident; for to the sea the demons went of themselves, when permitted, at their own request, to enter into the swine.

Ro. 10:7, 'Who shall descend into the abyss, o bring up Christ again from the dead?' i. e. as Campbell explains it, faith does not require, or our satisfaction, things impracticable, either to scale the heavens, or to explore the profound recesses of departed spirits. For the word abyss signifies a pit or gulf, if not bottomless, at least of an indeterminate depth; and must mean here more than the grave, since nothing is more practicable for the living than a descent thither. Besides, to call the grave the abyss, is entirely unexampled. Let it be also observed, that it is not said, 'to bring Christ up from the grave,' but 'from the dead,' for which, to bring back the soul is, in the first place, necessary. In this instance, the term abyss corresponds to Hades, which generally denotes the intermediate state, place, or receptacle of souls between death and the general resurrection.

The Greek term ἀβύσσος occurs in Re. 9:1, 11, and 11:7, in 17:8, and 20:1,3, in all which places it should be rendered, 'the pit of the abyss—the angel of the abyss—the key of the abyss,' and so on. Grotius, on Lu. 8:31, observes, that the abyss or bottomless pit is the name that St. Peter calls Hell or Tartarus, 2 Pe. 2:4. This prison of Satan and his angels is represented in Re. 9:1, &c. as being permitted to be opened, by a righteous judgment of God, for his just punishment of apostate churches, who would not repent of their evil works. And as errors, delusions, and impostures blind the understanding, they are in the 3d verse compared to a great smoke, which hinders the sight, proceeding from the abyss. And truly, if interpreters are correct in applying this prophecy to Mahomet, the rise, progress, extent, and long continuance of his imposture may well be compared to a darkening smoke, issuing from the great abyss.

The confining Satan in the abyss for a thousand years, seems to be a figurative description of the restraint imposed upon all powers, that might either seduce men into error and wickedness, or persecute men of conscience, constancy, and faithfulness. During such a period, religion may be expected to flourish in purity and in peace. And this, perhaps, is the whole amount of what so many have dreamed, in relation to what is termed the Millennium.

The abyss sometimes signifies metaphorically grievous afflictions or calamities, in which, as in a sea, men seem ready to be overwhelmed. Ps. 42:7, and 71:20.

The pit, in Ez. 32:21 and 23, means the spacious sepulchre, full of receptacles hewn round about its sides, in which the dead were deposited. To this region of the dead, the land of the living is opposed.

ABADDON, or APOLLYON. Re. 9:11, 'And they (the mystical locusts) had a king over them, who is the angel of the abyss, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon.'

Here the hordes of the Saracens are described as armed locusts, under a leader called 'the Exterminator, or Destroyer,' for such is the meaning of the term above used. And this well agrees with the prophetic emblem, the distinguishing property of locusts being that of devolution; and still more with the military character of Mahomet and his successors the caliphs, who, in their wars for the propagation of the imposture, committed the most destructive inroads, and reduced many nations to misery and despair. The duration of these inroads and conquests is computed from the death of Mahomet in 632, until 782, in the reign of the empress Irene, and just before the accession of Haroun Alraschid to the caliphate, a term of five months or 150 days, reckoning each day for a year. But see under LOCUSTS.

Mede supposes, that there is an allusion in the word 'Abaddon' to the name of Obodas, the common name of the kings of that part of Arabia from whence Mahomet came, as Pharaoh was the common name of the kings of Egypt, and Cæsar of the emperors of Rome—but the conjecture appears fanciful.

Pococke derives it from the root bad, 'to perish.' The Arabians call the desert Albaidas, i. e. the place of destruction, whence Abaddon, as it were, the Angel of the Desert. And Mahomet brought the Saracens out of this quarter, being, as Nicephorus says, 'an unknown nation, coming from an inaccessible wilderness.'

ADULTERY is used symbolically to denote idolatry, or any departure from the law, worship, or service of God, which might be construed into unfaithfulness to that covenant which God condescends to describe as equivalent to the marriage contract, a figure frequently used to signify the relation in which he was pleased to stand to his people, speaking of them as a spouse, and of himself as their husband. Thus in Jer. 3:8,9. 5:7. 13:27, and other passages.

Also in Ez. 16:32. 23:27,43, &c.

And in Re. 2:22.

In Jer. 2:2, God reminds Israel, of their affection to him, for they never showed much, as their history testifies, but of his to them, which was on his part perfectly gratuitous, and which led him to spouse them; that is, to engage in a special contract with them to be their God, and to take them for his peculiar people.

In Jer. 3:14, where God says, 'For I am married to you,' or rather, 'For I have been a husband among you,' he reminds them, that he had fulfilled the covenant on his part, by protecting and blessing them as he had promised. And therefore, as they never had any reason to complain of him, he urges them to return to their duty, and promises in that case to be still kinder to them than before.

See also Jer. 31:39, and Ho. 8:9.

Jer. 13:37. Here Jerusalem is reproached with having practised her idolatry in such a deliberate manner, as showed it to proceed from a steady attachment, which, at the same time, she was at no pains to disguise, having chosen the most public places for the scene of her wickedness.

AIR. The air may be considered as the mansion of evil spirits, of whom Satan is the chief. In this view, it may denote the jurisdiction of those invisible powers, which powers symbolically represent their visible agents and instruments on earth.

It was the opinion of Pythagoras, as Diogenes Laertius mentions, that 'all the air was full of souls or spirits, and that these were they who were thought to be demons or heroes—that by them dreams were sent to men,' &c.

The Jews also believed, that, from the earth to the firmament, all things were full of these companies or rulers, and that there was a prince over them, who was called the Governor of the World, that is, of the darkness of it.

Ep. 6:12, 'The prince of the power of the air.'

The power of the air, says Chandler, signifies that government and dominion which is exercised by evil spirits, who are supposed to have their habitation assigned them in the air above us; and who are represented in Scripture as subject to one, who is the head or prince over them, the author of their apostasy from God, and their leader in their rebellion against him; called here 'the prince of the power of the air,' or of that government which is exercised in the regions of the air, and amongst wicked and apostate spirits, who now work in or amongst the children of disobedience, influencing them to continue in their idolatry and vices, and to refuse submission to the gospel of the Son of God.

Re. 9:2, 'The sun and the air were darkened.'

A dark smoke is said to issue from the pit or abyss, so thick that it intercepted the light of the sun, and obscured the whole air; a just representation of great errors, such as those of Mahomet, who is here thought to be pointed at, darkening the understanding, obscuring the truth, and attended with violence and destruction.

Re. 16:17, 'The angel poured out his vial into the air.'

The pouring out the vial into the air, is a proper expression to point out the very seat and foundation of Satan's power and authority as god of this world, and to denote the restraining of that power, so that he shall no longer be able to prevail, either to corrupt the truth of Christianity, or to persecute its faithful professors.

The air, as the midst of heaven, or the middle station between heaven and earth, may symbolically represent the place where the Divine judgments are denounced. Thus, in 1 Ch. 21:16, it is said, 'David saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven,' when about to destroy Jerusalem by the pestilence. The hovering of the angel showed, that there was still time by prayer to avert the judgment. It had not yet fallen upon the earth, nor as yet done any execution.

ALTAR. An altar, both among the Jews and the heathen, was an asylum—a sanctuary—for such persons as fled to it for refuge. This appears from Ex. 21:14. 1 K. 1:50. 1 K. 2:28, and other passages.

And as to the practice of the heathen in this respect, all the Greek writers are more or less copious.

See under HOLDS.

Re. 13:10, 'We have an altar,' &c.

The Christian altar, i. e. the table of the Lord, considered as furnished with the memorials of the sacrifice of his death, of which memorials Christians are to partake, but of which they have no right to eat, who serve the tabernacle. So Parkhurst.

But Macknight explains it thus: 'Here, by a usual metonymy, the altar is put for the sacrifice, as is plain from the apostle's adding, 'of which they have no right to eat.' This is the sacrifice which Christ offered for the sins of the world; and the eating of it does not mean corporeal eating, but the partaking of the pardon which Christ, by that sacrifice, had procured for sinners.'

Re. 8:3, 'Offer it with prayers on the golden altar.'

Re. 8:13, 'From the horns of the golden altar.'

In those two passages, the scenery is taken from the holy place, where the priest used to officiate in the worship of the Jews; there being, in this representation of the heavenly presence, no veil, and no distinction between the holy and most holy place.

Altars were built of stones, which, in the case of those erected to the true God, were suble to be hewn, Ex. 20:25. Jos. 8:31. 1 K. 18:31. 1 S. 6:14. The Gentiles imitated the same, as appears from Pausanias, b. vi. p. 382, where he mentions 'an altar of white stone;' and Apollonius Rhodius, in speaking of the temple of Mars, Argon, b. ii.—

'And all devoutly round the altar stood;
This of small stones composed, was placed before
The lofty temple's double folding-door:
Within the fane a stone of sable hue
Stood, where the Amazons their victims slew.'

Poetae.

The tombs, says Bryant, in his Mythology, of which frequent mention is made by the ancient writers, were in reality high altars or pillars, and not, as has been supposed, monuments erected in honor of the dead. Such a one the Argonauts are said to have found in the temple of Mars, when they landed upon the coast of Pontus. This was the express object to which the Amazonians paid their adoration, as they lived in an age when statues were not known.

Altars were generally erected at the gates of the city. See 2 K. 23:3. And we may refer to this Ac. 14:13, where the priest of Jupiter is said to have brought filleted oxen to the gates, to perform sacrifice.

It is observable, that Agnes in the Greek, and Ave in the Latin, is used only of an altar erected in honor of idols; whilst that for the service of the true God, is constantly called Sacrarium in Greek, and Atrium in Latin.

One wooden table was wont to be placed in the midst of every meeting-place of the primitive Christians, upon which each of them laid what he bestowed for the use of the poor, as we are informed by Theodoret, b. v. c. 18, (see He. 12:16); and because alms are noted with the name of sacrificia, that table upon which they were laid was called by the ancient Christians an altar.

ANGEL. A name, not of nature, but of office, as Austin observes. Both the Hebrew and Greek terms signify messenger.

In the prophetic style, every thing is called an angel, that notifies a message from God, or executes the will of God. A prophetic dream is an angel. The pillar of fire, that went before the Israelites, is called God's angel. The winds and flames of fire are angels to us, when used by God as voices to teach us, or as rods to punish us. So that God is properly said to reveal by his angel, whilst he makes known, either by voice, by dream, by vision, or another manner of true prophetic revelation. Secular princes may, in some such sense, be termed angels. See 2 S. 14:17, 20.

The Angel of a Nation denotes its king or ruler.

Ecclesiastical officers are named angels in the Epistles to the Seven Churches, the chief pastor of each church being addressed by that title.

Angel, simply taken, sometimes signifies any visible agent made use of by God in bringing about the designs of his providence.

Angel from the Altar signifies an ecclesiastical minister.

Angel of the Waters, Re. 16:5. Rivers and fountains of waters may not unfitly signify the original countries or seats of empires, in distinction from the provinces; and the angel here denotes the minister or instrument employed in executing this judgment of God upon the kingdom of the Beasts.

Angel who had power over Fire, Re. 14:18, signifies the minister of God's vengeance having power over fire, which is the emblem of his wrath. So the priest in the ancient temple service, who had charge of the fire on the altar, was called the priest over fire. See Vires.

Rulers have the same name given them, Re. 13:6, as is given to angels in He. 1:14, with the necessary exception of the term spirits.

The Angel of the Bottomless Pit, Re. 9:2. These figurative locusts are represented as having a king, though the natural locusts, as Agur observes (Pr. 30:57), have none; and this king is that evil spirit, who, from the constant mischief he is doing in the world, is called the Destroyer.

Four Angels bound on the Euphrates, Re. 9:14. See Fovus.

Michael and his angels, Re. 12:7. This state of the church is described under the form of a severe contest between faithful Christians and the abettors of idolatry, wickedness, and error, which should terminate in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion.

But see this text further illustrated under Seven.

ARM. The symbol of strength or power.

Ps. 16:15, 'Break thou the arm of the wicked; diminish or destroy his power.'

Ex. 30:21, 'I have broken the arm of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. See the same image in Jer. 48:25.'

Put to denote the infinite power of God: Ps. 89:13, 'Thou hast a mighty arm.' Ps. 98:1, 'His holy arm hath gotten him the victory.' Is. 53:1, 'To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?' i. e. his power in making the gospel effectual. See Jn. 12:38.

Ex. 6:6, 'I will redeem you with a stretched-out arm,' i. e. with a power fully exerted; and so in other passages. The metaphor is taken from the attitude of warriors baring and stretching out the arm to fight, after removing every impediment to its action. Thus in Is. 52:10, 'Jehovah hath made bare his holy arm in the sight of all the nations.' And it is under the same figure, though not the same term, that Paul, speaking of the gospel, Ro. 1:16, says, 'It is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth.'

Is. 9:30, 'They shall eat every one the flesh of his own arm.' Bishop Lowth has here corrected the reading, from the Seventy and other versions, and shown that it should be 'the flesh of his neighbor,' similar to Jer. 19:9; that is, they shall harass and destroy one another. See his note on the place.

ARROW. The symbol of calamities or diseases inflicted by God. Thus Jb. 34:6, which our translators have rendered, 'My wound is incurable without transgression,' should be translated, 'I am desperately pierced through by arrows.'

See also Jb. 6:4. Ps. 38:2. De. 32:23, and compare Ex. 5:16. Zch. 9:14.

Ovid has this passage:

'Non mea sunt summa leviter districta sagitta
Pectora decussat vulnus ad una meum.'

It is also applied figuratively to lightnings, which are God's arrows. See Ps. 18:15. Ps. 144:6. Ha. 3:11; and compare Wisd. 5:21. 2 S. 18:15.

On Ha. 3:11, Calvin says, that the arrows and spears of the Israelites are called those of God, under whose auspices his people fought; or the instruments of destruction which God employed (Jos. 10:11), may be metaphorically called his arrows and spears.

Sometimes arrow denotes some sudden and inevitable danger, as in Ps. 91:5, 'The arrow that flies by day.'

Also any thing, injurious, as a deceitful tongue, Ps. 138:4. Jer. 9:7; a bitter word, Ps. 64:4; a false testimony, Ps. 25:18.

On the other hand, it is used to signify well-educated children, Ps. 137:4, 5. The gate was the place of resort for public business and justice, under the portico that belonged to it. Children would support a man there, in his contests and pretensions; according to the rendering of the Chaldee, 'They shall not be put to shame, when they contend with their adversaries in the gate of the judgment-hall.'

The term 'arrow' is specially applied to the word of God in the hands of the Messiah, Ps. 45:6. Is. 49:2; on which last passage see Bishop Lowth's excellent note.

Ex. 21:21, 'To use divination, he mingled his arrows.'

Divination by arrows was an ancient method of presaging future events. Jerome says, the manner was thus: They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities against which they intended to make war, and then, putting them all into a quiver promiscuously, they caused them to be drawn out in the manner of lots, and that city whose name was on the arrow first drawn out, was the first they assaulted. Nebuchadnezzar is here represented as acting thus;—he comes to the head of two roads, mingles his arrows in a quiver, that he might thence divine in what direction to pursue his march,—he consults teraphim, and inspects the livers of beasts, in order to determine his resolution. See Potter's Arch. Græc. v. 1, b. 2, v. 16.

Seven divining arrows were kept at the temple of Mecca; but generally, in divination, the idolatrous Arabs made use of three only, on one of which was written, 'My Lord hath commanded me;' on another, 'My Lord hath forbidden me;' and the third was left blank. If the first was drawn, they looked on it as an approbation of the enterprise in question; if the second, they made a contrary conclusion; but if the third happened to be drawn, they mixed them, and drew over again, till a decisive answer was given by one of the others. Salmi Koran, Prelim. Disc. p. 186. Pocock's Oss. Hist. Arab. p. 339, is referred to by Mr. Lewis, as treating fully of this mode of divination. See Ho. 4:12.

Ex. 21:22, 'Towards his right hand fell his divination against Jerusalem.'

Supposing the face towards the east, the southern branch of the two roads, which we towards the right hand, led to Jerusalem, for this city lay to the south of Rabbat. You may represent Nebuchadnezzar as coming from Dan, and marching along the Jordan. Ben Habbat was situated at the left hand, and Jerusalem at the right. (Michæalis.)

ASHES. The symbol of human frailty, Ge. 18:27; of deep humiliation, Est. 4:1. Jos. 3:6. Mat. 11:21. Lu. 10:13. Jb. 42:6. Da. 12:1; ceremonial mode of purification, He. 9:13; they are likened to hearth-heat, Ps. 147:16.

In Ex. 37:30, we find the mourning Tyrians described as wallowing in ashes; and we may remark that the Greeks had the like custom of strewn themselves with ashes in mourning. Thus Homer, Iliad, 18, line 23, &c., speaking of Achilles bewailing the death of Patroclus:

'Cast on the ground, O furious hero, to spend
The scorching ashes of his golden land:
His purple garments, and his golden helm,
These he deforms with dust, and these he tears.'

Laertes shows his grief in the same manner, Odys. 24, l. 315:

'Deep from his soul he sighed, and sorrowing quail
A cloud of ashes on his heavy head.'

Compare Virgil, Æn. 10, l. 544, and Ovid's Metam. b. 8, l. 538.

Is. 44:20, 'He feedeth on ashes.' He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment; a proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labor to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, ch. 12:1, 'Ephraim feedeth on wind.' See Lowth's note.

Is. 61:3, 'A beautiful crown instead of ashes.' See Lowth's note. A chaplet, crown, or other ornament of the head, instead of dust and ashes, which before covered it; and the costly ointments, used on occasions of festivity, instead of the emblems of sorrow. See 2 S. 14:2. Judith 10:3.

Maximus Tyrius, referring to this custom among the heathen, Disc. 30, p. 355, observes, 'Let men lament and implore ever so much, or pour ever so much dust upon their heads, God will not grant what ought not to be granted.'

Jb. 2:8, 'And he sat down among the ashes.' So Ulysses in Odyssey, b. 7, l. 153:

'Turn to the ground, where he bowed his head,
And bumbled in the ashes took his place.'

See also 11, 18, v. 26.

Ps. 102:9, 'I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping; i. e. I have eaten the bread of humiliation, and drank the water of affliction; ashes being the emblem of the one, and tears the consequence of the other. See Horne on the text.

AXE. The symbol of the divine judgments. Sometimes applied to a human instrument, as in Is. 10:15, 'Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith?' i. e. shall the proud king of Assyria boast himself against God, whose instrument he is to execute his purposes? Jer. 51:20,

'O battle-axe, thou shalt be my weapon of war,
And with thee will I break in pieces nations.'

The army of the Medes and Persians is most probably here intended; as elsewhere the instrument of God's vengeance is called a sword, a rod, a scourge. (Blayney.) See also Jer. 46:22. And by axes, which were a part of the insignia of the Roman magistracy, was denoted the power of life and death, and of supreme judgment. Whence Cicero, in his Orat. 15 Verr. says, 'O dii immortales, prædare defensionem, mercatorem cum imperio ac summum, in provinciam misimus.'

The most common use of the axe, as is well known, is to cut down trees; hence the expression in Mat. 3:10, and Luke 3:3, 'the axe is laid at the root of the trees.'

Silvius Italicus, lib. 10, has,
'Agrimæ prætorumque locos, montes ipsi bipenni
Populæ secant.'

See also Virgil, Æn. 6, v. 180,

'Pæcibus pacis, montes ipsi secantibus Æn
Fœdare reges trahit: cunctis at fœdare reges
Fœdibus: adversum ingentes auctoribus oras.'

Hence we find such expressions as these in Is. 10:33,

'Behold Jehovah, the Lord of hosts,
Shall lop the flourishing branch with a chiseled tool,
And the high of stature shall be cut down,
And the lofty shall be brought low;
And he shall hew the children of the forest with iron,
And Lebanon shall fall by a mighty hand.'

The axe was also used as the instrument of decollation, to which there is allusion in Re. 20:4, 'The souls of them that were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus.' Literally, 'cut with an axe.'

B.

BABYLON. Re. 16:19. 17:5. 18:10,21.

That Babylon in these passages is symbolically meant of Rome, is not difficult to prove. Dabuz has very accurately given the reasons why the latter is so called, namely, not only on account of Rome's being guilty of usurpation, tyranny, and idolatry, and of persecuting the church of God, as the literal Babylon did; but also as being the possessor of the pretended rights of Babylon, by a successive devolution of power.

The literal Babylon was the beginner and supporter of tyranny and idolatry; first by Nimrod or Ninus, and afterwards by Nebuchadnezzar; and therefore, in Is. 47:12, she is accused of magical enchantments from her youth or infancy, i. e. from her very first origin as a city or nation.

This city and its whole empire were taken by the Persians under Cyrus. The Persians were subdued by the Macedonians, and the Macedonians by the Romans; so that Rome succeeded to the power of Old Babylon.

And it was her method to adopt the worship of the false deities she had conquered; so that by her own acts she became the heir and successor of all the Babylonian idolatry, and of all that was introduced into it, by the intermediate successors of Babylon, and consequently of all the idolatry of the earth.

Rome Pagan, corrupted by dressing up the idolatry of Rome Pagan in another form, and forcing it upon the world, became the successor of the old literal Babylon in tyranny and idolatry, and may therefore be properly represented and called by the name of Babylon; it being the usual style of the prophets to give the name of the head or first institutor to the successors, however different they may be in some circumstances; as, in Ez. ch. 37, the Messiah is called David, as being successor to David; and as the Christian church, though chiefly composed of Gentiles, is called, Ga. 6:16, by the name of Israel, as successively inheriting, in a spiritual sense, the promises made to the literal Israel.

So Rachel, in Jer. 31:15. Mat. 2:18, is put for the town, or women inhabiting the town of Bethlehem, in which was the sepulchre of the literal Rachel, of which consequently those inhabitants were still in possession.

And so the Persians and Moguls call the Ottoman Turks by the name of Roumi, Romane, because they are in possession of the country and capital (Constantinople) enjoyed by the ancient Romans. (See Herbelot, under the title Roma.)

Further, that Babylon is Rome, is evident from the explanation given by the angel in Re. 17:18, where it is expressly said to be 'that great city which ruleth over the kings of the earth'; no other city but Rome being in the exercise of such power at the time when the vision was seen.

That Constantinople is not meant by Babylon, is plain also from what Mede has stated, Works, p. 322. The seven heads of the beast (says he) are by the angel made a double type, both of the seven hills where the woman sitteth, and of the seven sovereignties with which in a successive order the Beast should reign. This is a pair of fetters to tie both Beast and whore to Western Rome. The seven sovereignties must not be separated from the seven hills, nor the seven hills from as many sovereignties. Constantinople may have as many hills, but those hills never had so many sovereignties. In other cities, where the sovereign Roman name (or but the name) hath reigned, are neither so many hills, nor ever were those seven succeeding sovereignties.

Rome or Mytic Babylon (says the same author, p. 464) is called the 'Great City,' not from any reference to its extent, but because it was the queen of other cities.

Babylon, as mentioned in 1 Pe. 5:13, is thought by some to be Rome, but by others, to be a place of the same name in Egypt. Baronius contradicts this last assertion, by saying, there is no mention of a Bishop of Babylon till 500 years after Peter's time, under Justin the Younger; which may be true, and yet such a church might exist in the apostles' days.

The paraphrase of Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, a Catholic writer, on Re. 17:5, is remarkable, as admitting Rome to be the city intended by St. John. 'Babylon (says he) is meant by the name of the Whore, and Rome by Babylon. This is the most natural sense. We see, then, why St. John represents Rome under the name of Babylon, as she had all the characters of Babylon, an empire full of idols and divinations, and a persecutor of the saints, as she was.' But then the bishop probably applied this to Rome Pagan. Had Rome Pagan persecuted the saints as she did, it could have excited no astonishment in the apostle's mind; but he might well greatly wonder, as Lowman observes, that Rome Christian, once so famous for purity of faith, and patient suffering for the profession of the truth, should become another Babylon for idolatry and persecution. From hence Protestant interpreters may with reason infer, that this vision does not represent the persecution of Rome Heathen, but of Rome Anti-Christian.

BALANCE, the known symbol of a strict observation of justice and fair dealing. It is thus used in several places of Scripture, as Jb. 31:6. Ps. 62:9. Pr. 11:1, and 16:11, and is so explained by the Indian Interpreter, ch. 15, and by all the interpreters in ch. 242.

But balance, joined with symbols denoting the sale of corn and fruits by weight, becomes the symbol of scarcity; bread by weight being a curse, in Le. 26:26, and in Ez. 4:16,17.

Moreover he said unto me: Son of man, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem; And they shall eat bread by weight and with care, And they shall drink water by measure and with astonishment: That they may want bread and water, And be astonished one with another, And pine away in their iniquity.

A case which Lucretius describes, b. 4, 948.

'Et quoniam non est quod sufficiat arto, Debiti sit corpus, ingurgit omnia membra, Brachia palpebre cadunt, popliteque procumbunt.'

The same curse is expressed by famine, in Ez. 5:16, and 14:13. And therefore the Holy Spirit, which in the gospel dispensation is said to be shed richly or abundantly, Ti. 3:6, is said in Jn. 3:34, not to be given by measure. So whereas grace is said to be given according to the measure of the gift of Christ, Ep. 4:7, that measure is understood to be, 'out of his fulness, and grace upon grace,' Ja. 1:16.

Re. 6:5, 'He that sat upon him had a pair of balances in his hand.' Here the balance, which in general is a representation of exact justice and righteous judgment, is used to weigh corn and the necessities of life, in order to signify great want and scarcity, and to threaten the world with famine.

The rider sits on a black horse, and black, in ancient prophecy, is an emblem of affliction, and in particular of affliction caused by famine. Thus Jerem. in La. 5:10, says, 'Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine,' referring to the effects of hunger in emaciating the body, and drying the skin.

The scarcity is further denoted by the price of a choenix or measure of wheat, being a penny or denarius, i. e. the whole wages of a man's labor for a day (Mat. 20:2), would only purchase so much corn as would suffice for a usual daily allowance; so that all he could get must be laid out on the very necessities of life.

The fulfilment of this prophecy is referred by most commentators to the times of Septimius Severus. See Newton, Daubuz, Lowman, and others.

To this period it is thought Tertullian refers in his address to Scapula, when he mentions unfavorable harvests and heavy rains.

But Mede is of a different opinion, and refers it not to a season of scarcity, but to the regard paid to justice and equity by Severus in the administration of his government, that he preserved an even balance among all, and to the supplies of corn he procured for his subjects in seasons of famine. And the character given of this emperor by Aurelius Victor, Spartian, and others, seems to warrant this opinion.

The passage referred to in the Indian Interpreter, ch. 15, is as follows: 'Si quis in somnis staterem vel campanam quod vocant (genus est stateris) loco quodam librari viderit, eus loco Judicis intelligat. Qnod si item habet, ac inter librandum ea viderit exaequari; jus suum obtinebit.'

'Si staterem equam puramque videre viderit, Judicem loci justum esse cognoscet; sin perveras fractasque lances viderit, ejus loco Judicem, quo loco somnium vidit, injustum cognoscet.'

REAR. Da. 7:5, 'Another beast, a second like to a bear.'

Re. 13:2, 'His feet were as the feet of a bear.'

The bear, according to the Persian Interpreter, in ch. 374, signifies a rich, powerful, and fool-hardy enemy. See Pr. 17:12. 2 S. 17: 8. Ho. 1:38.

According to Aristotle, the bear is a greedy animal, as well as silly and fool-hardy. His name in Hebrew, dash, the grumbler, seems to be taken from his grumbling or growling, especially when hungry or enraged. So Buffon remarks, t. 8, 'La voix de l'ours est un grondement, un gros murmure, souvent mêlé d'un frottement de dents qu'il fait surtout lorsqu'on l'irrite.' Compare Is. 59:11.

'We groan all of us like the bears; And, like the doves, we make a confused noise.'

This growl the Latin writers express by grom-

Axes were also used in war; hence Sidonius, Jarm. El. 5, v. 247,

'Excessum cibus vastum per inane secures.'

And Horace, b. 4, Ode 4,

'Amazonia securi dextrae elarnet.'

Also in Carm. Secul. v. 54,

'Jam maris terraque manus potentem Medus, Albanasque times secures.'

And Virgil, Æn. 2, v. 480,

'Ipse inter primos correpta dura bipenni Linceus perempti, posteaque carmine vellit.'

Axes were used in sacrifice; hence Virgil,

'Quales mugitus fugit cum saucius aras Taurus de locustis exantem cervicis secutis.'

And Ovid, b. 12, Metam.

'candida tauri Rumpere sacrificia molitor colla securi.'

This sacrificial axe was called the axe of the Hierophant. These are seen on various coins.

The axe is laid at the root of the trees.

That trees are a general symbol of men, is well known. See under FOREST and TAXE. See also Ez. 31:3. Da. 4:7,8. Mat. 7:19, and 23:32. Ps. 1:3. Zech. 11:1,2. What John Baptist, therefore, refers to, is probably the exclusion of the Jewish commonwealth was to be rooted up by the axe of the divine judgment, and they were to remain, for many days, without a king, without a priest, without an ephod, and without sacrifices. How thoroughly this was done, Josephus tells us, b. 7, de Bell. Jud. c. 1: 'It was miserable to behold that country, formerly covered with trees and fertile plants, now lying plain like a desert; neither was there any stranger, who before had seen Judea, and the beautiful suburbs of Jerusalem, who, now beholding it, could obtain from tears, and not amend so woful a change. For this war extinguished utterly all signs of beauty; neither could one coming suddenly know the place which he well knew before.' Others, however, are disposed to interpret the passage in Mat. 3:10, as simply meaning the approaching gospel season, by the preaching of which, such methods should be taken in the course of divine providence, for the subduing and mortifying the power of sin among mankind, which, if not properly improved, would dreadfully aggravate the guilt of those still remaining in their sins, notwithstanding their possession of it.

When Paul says, Phil. 1:17, that he was set off the defence of the gospel, the original word is the same with that in this passage answering to laid, viz. scutari.

ASS, an animal of a patient, laborious, and stupid nature, the emblem of persons of a similar disposition.

Isaachar is called a strong ass, Ge. 49:14, in reference to his descendants, as being a settled agricultural tribe, who cultivated their own territory with patient labor, emblemized by the ass. We rarely read of Isaachar being engaged in any war, which is ever hostile to agriculture.

Of Jehoiaikim it is said, in Jer. 22:19,

'With the burial of an ass shall he be buried, dragged along.'

And cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem: in event mentioned by Josephus, who says, that the king of Babylon advanced with an army, that Jehoiaikim admitted him readily into Jerusalem, and that Nebuchadnezzar, having entered the city, instantly put him to death, and cast his dead body unburied without the walls.'

It is recorded of Christ in Zech. 9:9, and quoted hence in Mat. 21:5, that He should be

'Humble, and sitting on an ass, Even on a colt the foal of an ass.'

As horses were used in war, Christ may be supposed, by this action, to have shown the humble and peaceable nature of his kingdom.

The Wild Ass, which is more than once mentioned in Scripture, is a very different creature from the common ass in most of its qualities. Ephraim is compared to them, in Jo. 8:9, i. e. he was untamed to the yoke, and reversed the desert as earnestly in the pursuit of idols as the onager in quest of his mates.

Though wild asses, says Peacocke, be often found in the desert in whole herds, yet it is usual for some one of them to break away, and separate himself from the company, and run alone and at random by himself.

They are described by Jer. 14:6, as snuffing up the wind like dragons, i. e. they suck in the air for want of water to cool their internal heat. Elian describes serpents as doing the same, and Varro thus speaks of the ox,

'Et ex his suspiculis oculum (mirabile visum) Maribus serpentis patella descriptis adorem.'

See more in Blayney.

Job says, 30:5, 'Who hath sent out the wild ass free?' It seems to have no affinity with the common ass, but in the name, for it is a beautiful, excessively swift, and wild.

be, because it is a disagreeable, mournful sound.
See Horace, Epod. 16, line 51.

* See Vespertilio circumgredi Uruu oric.

* Nor growls around the fold the evening bear.

And Ovid. Metam. b. 3, l. 453.

* Vox insonda, insanaque,

Pleaque laetare rancore de gestu ferit.

Amiditque sua gemitu insana dolore.

* From her hoarse throat proceeds a horrid voice,

And with perpetual groans averts her grim.

Is. 11:7. 'And the cow and the bear shall feed; i. e. men of ferocious dispositions shall become mild and placable, and shall associate with those who were gentle and harmless.'

Ho. 13:5. 'As a bear bereaved of her whelps.' A circumstance, as Newcome observes, which adds a particular degree of fierceness. They never venture, says Cook in his Voyages, vol. iii. p. 367, to fire upon a young bear when the mother is near, for if the cub drowns, she becomes enraged to a degree little short of madness; and if she get sight of the enemy, will only quit her revenge with her life.

Re. 13:2. 'The feet of a bear.' The bear's feet are his best arms, with which he fights, either striking or embracing his antagonist, to squeeze him to death, or to trample him under foot.

Danubius refers this prophecy to the invasion of the Roman empire by the barbarians, of whom the Scythians and Germans in particular were very scottish, ignorant, and cruel.

Da. 7:5. 'A second beast, like to a bear.' The bear is well known to be a rapacious animal, and the command here given to it indicates its nature. The three projections are called in our version ribs; but the original word olein seems to denote something prominent or penetrating, and hence the term tusks is more natural and agreeable, especially as they are placed in the mouth or jaws, for so Houbigant renders it. The three tusks may refer to the three different points to which the Persians, denoted by the bear, pushed their conquests. Coming from the east, they invaded the western, southern, and northern territories. And thus we read in ch. 8:4, that the ram pushed westward, and northward, and southward. And that great havoc among the human race was made by the Persians, may be learned from Jer. 51:56, and also from the revolt of the Hyrcanians, and of Gobryas in the 4th book, and from other parts of the Cyropedia, as well as from most of the historians.

BEAST. WILD BEAST, the symbol of a tyrannical, usurping power or monarchy, that destroys its neighbors or subjects, and preys upon all about it, and persecutes the church of God.

The four beasts, in Da. 7:3, are explained in verse 17, of four kings or kingdoms, as the word king is interpreted, verse 23.

In several other places of Scripture, wild beasts are the symbol of tyrannical powers, as in Ez. 34:26, and Jer. 22:9, where the beasts of the field are explained, by the Targum, of the kings of the heathen and their armies.

Amongst profane authors, the comparison of cruel governors to savage beasts is obvious; and Horace calls the Roman people a many-headed beast. Lib. i. Ep. 1, v. 76.

And as for the onerotics, wild beasts are generally the symbols of enemies, whose malice and power are to be judged of in proportion to the nature and magnitude of the wild beasts they are represented by.

The seven heads of the beast, in Re. 17:9,10, have a twofold signification. 1st, They are seven mountains or hills, on which the metropolis of the beast is situated. 2d, They are seven successive orders or kinds of government, viz. Kings—Consuls—Tribunes—Decemvirs—Dictators—Emperors—The kingdom of the Goths in Italy. Tacitus, Annals, b. i, c. 1, expressly says, 'Rome was first governed by kings; then by consuls, by dictators, by decemvirs, by military tribunes with consular authority.'

After these seven forms became extinct, the popedom appeared in all its rior, and has continued ever since as the eighth head of the beast; but it is said, verse 11, 'He goeth into perdition; i. e. he shall be utterly destroyed, nor can his fate be far distant.'

The rising of a beast signifies the rise of some new dominion or government; the rising of a wild beast, the rise of a tyrannical government; and rising out of the sea, that it should owe its origin to the commotions of the people. So waters are interpreted by the angel, Re. 17:15. In the visions of Daniel, the four great beasts, the symbols of the four great monarchies, are represented rising out of the sea in a storm. 'I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea, and four great beasts came up from the sea.' Da. 7:2,3.

Campanella de March. Hispan. App. p. 509, suggests, that the founders of the four monarchies are called beasts, on account of the savage and cruel measures they pursued. 'Et quia omnes quatuor monarchiarum fundatores Nimrod hunc secuti, contra naturalem institutum, ceteras nationes nulla justa de causa, sed mera ambitione et regnandi cupiditate extimulati oppugnaverunt, idcirco, quemadmodum quidam tradunt, quatuor ille monarchie a Daniele propheta sub nomine ferarum bestiarum descripti fuisse, ad sevitiam et immanitatem illorum denotandum.'

May we not add, that all earthly governments do and will partake of the beastly character, until they assimilate more to the nature and laws of Christianity, in their abstinence from sanguinary wars, from national pride, from the worship of mammon, from unjust and partial legislation, and from every crooked scheme of maintaining their power and influence.

In Da. 8:4, it is said of the Medo-Persian ram, that no beast might stand before him, meaning, that no state or kingdom was able to resist his power.

BED, when a person is cast into it by way of punishment, is a bed of languishing, and therefore, a symbol of great tribulation, and anguish of body and mind. For, to be tormented in bed, where men seek rest, is the highest of griefs. See Ps. 41:3. 68. Jb. 33:19. Is. 28:20.

BEES. The king of Ethiopia is termed a fly, and the king of Assyria a bee, probably because in picture writing they were represented by these symbols: thus Is. 7:18,

* Abessah shall bin for the fly;

That is in the utmost part of the rivers of Egypt.

And for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

That is, the Lord shall call the Ethiopian and Assyrian kings to avenge his quarrel. The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees, who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again by a hiss or whistle. The same figure is used in ch. 5:26.

'He will hiss every one of them from the ends of the earth, And behold, with speed swiftly shall they come.'

See also De. 1:44. Ps. 118:12; and God calls the locusts his great army, Jo. 2:25. Ex. 33:28.

The Hebrew term for bee, deber, signifies a leader, from the admirable order with which they conduct their operations. And as the bees form a sort of body politic, having a monarch and the like, this insect may be used with propriety as the symbol of the Assyrian king. See Virgil's Georgics, b. iv, at the beginning. And compare Homer's simile, descriptive of the multitude of the Grecian forces pouring from the ships and tents, II. ii. l. 87.

'As from some rocky cliff the shepherd swain,
Clustering in heaps on heaps, the driving bee,
Rolling and blackening, swarms succeeding swarms,
With deeper murmur and more hoarse alarms;
Dusky they spread, a close embodied crowd,
And o'er the vale descends the living flood,
So, from the tents and ships, &c.

Pope's Version.

Those who have studied the Septuagint know, that after Ps. 6:1, where the ant is pointed out as a pattern of foresight, that version refers also to the bee in these words:

'Or go to the bee, and learn what a worker she is,
And how neatly she makes her comb:
Of whose honey both kings and subjects partake for their health.'

She is loved and praised by all,
And, though of a weak body, she is valued as regarding wisdom.'

Whether this passage, which is neither in the Hebrew nor Vulgate, was interpolated by some transcriber, who had a mind to add an ingenious similitude, it is difficult to say. It is in all the editions of the Septuagint except the Complutensian. There are many other proverbs in the Septuagint and Vulgate, as is known to scholars, which are not in the Hebrew, and vice versa, there are some in the Hebrew that are not in the Septuagint.

BEHIND. According to the Greek and Roman authors, as the back parts, accounted behind, follow the face as leader, so whatsoever is said after, behind, is accounted as future coming after, and not as past.

Thus in Artemidorus, b. i. c. 51, the back signifies the old age or future time of the party. And the red color on the back of the dragon, in Homer, II. ii. v. 308, denoted the event there signified to be future.

So in Homer's Iliad, b. iii. v. 109, 'to see things at once before and behind,' is explained by the scholiast of seeing things present and future. And so in Virgil, Æn. b. viii. v. 657, a trogo, behind, signifies an event to come, as Servius has observed upon the place.

The reason of this symbolical signification of the word behind, may be perhaps more clearly given thus:—What is past is known, and therefore as present or before. But an event to come is unknown, unseen, and, therefore, behind—and to follow after, in order to be brought into actual existence. See Lo. 25:51.

Behind, when not taken symbolically, signifies what is past; as in Phil. 3:14.

BELLY is considered as the seat of the carnal affections, according to the notions of the ancients, as being that which partakes first of sensual pleasures.

Therefore the Egyptians, in the embalming of a man, threw that part of the body into the river, as the cause of all his sins, that it might, as it were, take them away with it. See Porphyry de Abstin. b. iv. § 10.

The onerotics understand the symbol of belly, concerning the family and riches of a man. Ch. 79, 149, 113, 137.

But Artemidorus, speaking of that part of the human frame, observes, that if it suffers any thing, it portends diseases and woe. L. i. c. 45.

The imbitting of the belly signifies all the train of afflictions which may come upon a man, as in Jer. 4:19-215. And the same is fully evident from the bitter waters of jealousy, Nu. 18:27.

BIND. To bind is to forbid, or to restrain from acting—to loose is to permit. See Lightfoot's Hor. Heb. on Mat. 16: and the scholiast upon Homer's Iliad, E. v. 355, 356, 357, where the binding of Mars with a strong chain is explained of putting an end to war. See Mat. 16:19. 18:18. Compare Mat. 20:22.

BIRDS. Birds of prey signify armies who come to prey upon a country. See Jer. 12:4.

'As the ravens have taken their heritage from the nest; O ye ravens birds, come ye against her round about; Assemble, all ye beasts of the field, Come ye to devour.'

And see Blayney's note on the passage Ez. 39:17, which last Ezekiel seems to have imitated from Is. 34:6; and see Re. 19:17,18, where we find Ezekiel's animated address to the birds of prey, and even some of his expressions.

The reason of the metaphor is plain. As birds of prey feed upon carcases, so those that take the goods of other men, eat as it were their food; which, in the symbolical language, always signifies riches or substance, as may be seen under the word FEAST.

BITTER. Bitterness, in Ex. 1:14. Re. 1:28. Jer. 9:15, is the symbol of affliction, misery, and servitude. And, therefore, the servitude of the Israelites in Egypt, was typically represented in the celebration of the passover by bitter herbs.

Am. 8:10.

'And I will make it as a mourning for an only son,
And the end thereof as a day of bitterness.'

So Tibullus, b. ii. 4, 11.

'Nunc et amara dies, et acerba amarae tristitia est.'

Ha. 1:6.

'For behold, I will raise up the Chaldeans,
That bitter and swift nation.'

Schultens observes, that the root swar in Arabic is usually applied to strength and courage.

Re. 8:11. The 'bitterness of the waters,' is referred to the invasion of Genseric, king of the Vandals, who bitterly afflicted the Romans in the year 455, who also exposed the doctrines of Arius, and during his whole reign cruelly persecuted the orthodox Christians.

Ac. 8:23. 'The gall of bitterness; i. e. extreme wickedness, a state highly offensive to God, and hurtful to others.'

He. 12:15. 'A root of bitterness;—a wicked or scandalous person, or any dangerous sin leading to apostasy.'

Aristotle applies the term bitter to disposition, in his Ethics, iv. c. 5. 'Men of a hard disposition are hardly placable, and retain their anger a long time.'

BLACK. Black, in ancient prophecy, is the symbol of affliction, disaster, and anguish.

It is the color of approaching death, or of the terror which the foresight of it causes. See Virgil, Æn. b. 9, v. 618, 'atrocem timorem.' It is used, in particular, of affliction excited by famine.

Thus La. 5:10, 'Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine.' See Jb. 32:36, 'My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.' And Jer. 14:2.

'Because of the drought Judah mourneth,
And the gates thereof languish;
They are in deep mourning (Re. 14:10) for the lack,
And the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.'

See Blayney's note. Ma. 3:14, 'and that we have walked mournfully (lit. in black), meaning that they had fasted in sackcloth and ashes. Black occurs as the symbol of fear, in Job. 2:8.

'All these shall gather blackness.'

Jerome thus explains the passage: 'Through the greatness of their fear, their faces shall be turned like a pot; which, being burnt with fire, makes a foul appearance by its blackness and sootiness.' Joel seems to point to that dark leapair, or deep distress, which the approach of the locusts should make the countenance of every person contract.

Virgil gives the epithet of black to fear, not only in the passage quoted above, but also in Georgic iv. l. 468.

Calligramma alga formidat lacum.

The same poet applies it also to dying persons, o whom every thing appears dark. Thus Camilla to her sister Acca, when dying, Æn. iii. line 823.

Tenebris nigrescent omnia circum.

The same expression which Joel uses, is found in Na. 2:10, to denote the extremity of sorrow and pain. Thus:—

*'The knees smite together,
And there is great pain in all souls,
And the faces of them all gather blackness.'*

Eccl. 6:3, 6. Here four chariots, drawn by horses of different colors, represent the four great empires of the world in succession, the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, distinguishable both by their order and attributes. The black horses seem to denote the Persian empire, which, by subduing the Chaldeans, and being about to inflict a second heavy chastisement on Babylon, quieted God's spirit with respect to Chaldees, a country always spoken of as lying to the north of the Jews. See Blayney and Newcome.

Re. 6:5, 'I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.'

This figure of a person, and the balances to weigh corn and the other necessities of life, signified great want and scarcity, and threatened the world with famine, the next judgment of God to the sword. Thus famine is expressed by the prophet Ezekiel, ch. 4:16, 17. See BALANCE.)

Re. 6:12, 'The sun became black as sackcloth of hair.'

One of the figures employed to describe, as we think, the state of the church during the last and most severe of the persecutions under the heathen Roman empire. Great public calamities are often thus figuratively described by earthquakes, eclipses, and the like, as if the order of nature were inverted.

Eccl. 3:7, 'And I will cover the heavens when I quench thee, And I will clothe the stars thereof with black. I will cover the sun with a cloud, And the moon shall not give her light. And all the shining lights of the heavens I will clothe with black over thee, And will make darkness upon thy land, And the Lord shall be feared.'

It is well known that the destruction of kingdoms is denoted by the strong figurative language used in this and the foregoing verse. See Bo. Lowth on Is. 13:10.

BLOOD. The symbol of slaughter and mortality. Thus Is. 34:3,

*'And their slain shall be cast out,
And from their carcasses their stink shall ascend,
And the mountains shall melt down with their blood.'*

Eccl. 14:19, 'If I send a pestilence upon that land, And pour out my fury upon it in blood, To cut off from it man and beast.'

Blood, says Grotius, denotes every kind of carnate death.

Eccl. 3:6, 'And I will water the earth with thy gore, Thy blood shall be on the mountains, And the streams shall be filled with thee.'

Eccl. 30:17, 'Ye shall eat flesh and drink blood, The flesh of the mighty shall ye eat, And the blood of the princes of the earth shall ye drink, Of man, and bulls, and of he-goats, Of bulls, all of them fillings of Baabon, And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, And ye shall drink blood till ye be drunken, Of my sacrifice which I make for you.'

This bold imagery (says Newcome) is founded on the custom of invitations to feasts after sacrifices. Ezekiel seems to have imitated and amplified Is. 34: above quoted. Kings, princes, and tyrants, are naturally expressed by rams, bulls, and he-goats.

Re. 14:20, 'And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even to the horses' bridles, by the space of 1600 furlongs.'

The great quantity of blood mentioned in the vision is a strong image representing some great slaughter of the enemies of God and of true religion; but what particular judgment his prophecy describes is not well agreed by interpreters.

See also Re. 19:17, 18, where the sublime author has taken his images from Ezekiel rather than from Isaiah.

Blood is sometimes put for sanguinary purposes, as in Is. 33:15, 'that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood;' more properly, who stoppeth his ears to the proposal of bloodshed.

Compare Pr. 1:11.

Ge. 49:11, 'He washed his clothes in the blood of grapes.'

Here the figure is easily understood. Any thing of a red color may be compared to blood, as in De. 32:14, and Sirach 50:17; and agrees well with what Andronicus wrote to Alexander the Great (Pliny 14, c. 5), 'O king, when about to drink wine, remember that you are laving the blood of the earth.'

1 Ch. 11:19, 'Shall I drink the blood of these men?' i. e. Shall I drink the water which these men have fetched for me at the hazard of their lives? And he poured it out in honor of Jehovah; thereby, as Parkhurst observes, acknowledging himself unworthy for whom men should lay down their lives, but that these were to be given up for Jehovah only. Is this the idea (adds he) of our sacrament Christian kings?

Blood is also the symbol of atonement, Mat. 26:28. He. 13:9. The object of the effusion of blood in sacrifices was the expiation of sin. This we are taught by Moses in Le. 17:11, 'For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul.' And the apostle says expressly, He. 9:22, 'And almost all things are by the law purged with blood, and without shedding of blood is no remission (of sins).' Compare Ex. 29:36. Le. 6:26. 2 Ch. 29:24. Hence also the Jews had this proverb, Gemar. Jom. fol. 5, 'There is no expiation except by blood.' Ain capers d la bedem. That the Gentiles themselves believed this, appears from Virgil's words, Æn. l. 2.

*'Sanguine placatis ventos, et virgine cœni,
Cum primis Illeas Daniel venialis ad oras,
Sanguine querendi reditus, animaque lituodum.'*

*'With blood, O Greeks, and with a virgin slain,
When bound for Troy, you soothed the winds and main,
With blood must you procure a calm return,
And a Greek victim in oblation burn.'*

Theobald's Version.

By the blood of the Lamb of God, the faithful are not only consecrated to his service as a peculiar people, but are also cleansed from their sins. See Re. 1:5, 6, 'who loved us and washed us from our sins by his blood, and hath constituted us kings and priests to God, even his Father.' This mystery is also set forth in He. 9:13, 14, 'If the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purify your consciences from dead works, to serve the living God.'

BOOK. A book seen in a dream, according to Artemidorus, signifies the life, i. e. the acts of him that sees it.

According to the Indian interpreters, a book is the symbol of power and dignity.

The Jewish kings, at the time they were crowned, had the book of the law of God put into their hands. See 2 K. 11:2. 2 Ch. 23:11. And thus, in allusion to this custom, to receive a book may be the symbol of the inauguration of a prince.

A book or roll folded up, in order to be laid aside, is the symbol of a law abrogated, or of a thing of no further use.

A book or roll, written within and without, or on the back side, Re. 5:1, may be a book containing a long series of events; it being not the custom of the ancients to write on the back side of the roll; except when the inside would not contain all their writing. See Juvenal, Sat. i. verse 6.

'Scriptus est in tergo, necdum finitus, Orestes.'

The ancient books were rolled on cylinders of wood or ivory, and usually the writing was only on the inside.

A book sealed is a book whose contents are secret, and have for a very long time been so, and are not to be published till the seal be removed. Horace has used this symbol, Lib. l. Ep. 20, v. 3.

To eat a book signifies to consider it carefully and digest it well in the mind. See Re. 10:9, 'Thy words were found (says the prophet, Jer. 15:16), and I did eat them, and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart.' Our blessed Savior uses the same metaphorical expression, when he speaks of himself as 'the Bread of Life.' In many passages of the sixth chapter of John's Gospel.

The substance presented to the prophets, says Secker, which had the appearance of a roll, was capable of being eaten. Perhaps it was sweet from the pleasure of being so honorably employed.

'Book of life,' Re. 3:5.

On this passage Doddridge remarks, that the book of life does not signify the catalogue of those whom God has absolutely purposed to save, but rather the catalogue of those who were to be considered as heirs of the kingdom of heaven, in consequence of their Christian profession, till, by apostasy from it, they throw themselves out of that society to which they before belonged.

Vitrings remarks, that the expression 'book of life,' alludes to the genealogical tables of the Jewish priests (see Exr. 2:62. Ne. 7:64), as the white raiment mentioned in the same verse, i. e. in Re. 3:5, does to the priestly dress. See MacKnight's valuable note on Psal. 4:3; and Lowman on Re. 3:5.

Horne, in his excellent Introduction to the Scriptures, vol. iii. p. 294, 2d ed., refers this to the military customs of the Romans. 'The names of those who died (says he) or were cashiered for misconduct, were expunged from the muster-roll.' To this probably Re. 3:5 alludes—'I will not blot his name out of the book of life;' and in this view the similitude is very striking. But in a note in the same page, he shows that the allusion may be drawn from civil life. See the note itself, which is too long for transcription. The expression, 'I will not blot his name out,' shows that this was a probationary record, wherein men's deeds were registered, and their names kept in or blotted out, according to their deserts in the sight of God. See also Re. 32:19, where God threatens to take away a man's part out of the book of life, if that man should take away from the words of the prophecy.

Another thing to be remarked is, that in Re. 13:8, and 17:8, it is called the book of life from the foundation of the world, not the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, as is generally asserted. From this it would appear, as if God had recorded in a book at the time of the creation of all things, the names of all the men who should ever live in the world; and when the time of their actual existence came, there were set down over against their names the deeds by which they either glorified or dishonored God; and their names are spoken of as being retained in the book or blotted out of it, according to this procedure. Hence it is said of the general assembly and church of the first-born, that they are written in heaven, He. 12:23; and our Lord says to his apostles (Lu. 10:20), 'Rejoice rather, because your names are written in heaven.' All these things are figurative, but, like all figures, they have their meaning. Let no one conceive, because we call them figurative, that we do away with their signification; we only mean that they are not to be understood literally. What they actually import is a matter for the solemn consideration of every private Christian.

When Paul speaks of his fellow-laborers, whose names are in the book of life (Phil. 4:3), it may be said, How did he know that? The words can express no more than his cherished belief, that being faithful laborers, they would be rewarded with eternal life.

When Moses says (Ex. 32:32), 'Blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written,' to understand the expression, we must advert to the context. God had said, that if Moses would let him alone, He would destroy Israel for their idolatry, and make of him a great nation. But Moses, like a true patriot and intercessor, desires that God would spare the people and destroy him. The written book is merely a metaphorical expression, referring to the records kept in the courts of justice, where the deeds of criminals are registered, and signifies no more than the purpose of God in reference to future events; so that to be cut off by an untimely death, is to be blotted out of this book. Had Moses offered to forfeit eternal life for his brethren, he would only have offended God; nor would any man be justified in making such a proposal.

The similarity of Paul's case (Ro. 9:3) leads us to introduce it in connection with this subject, though it has strictly no relation to the symbol under consideration. It would imply a contradiction, that any saint could wish himself to be accursed from Christ, which in other words would be to say, that a man who loved Christ was willing to become his enemy; nor can any man be separated from Christ, unless he be in a state of sin and unbelief, which Paul was not.

The words have suffered from mistranslation. They should be read thus: 'That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart (though I myself was once willing to have been separated from Christ), for my brethren, my kinsmen; &c., meaning while he was a persecutor.'

The 'book of remembrance,' mentioned Ma. 3:16, seems to be an allusion to the records kept by Eastern kings, of the good deeds done by their subjects. See Eat. 6:1.

'The books were opened,' Re. 20:12; an allusion to the methods of human courts of justice. See Lowman's note on the passage.

BOW is the symbol of joy for the conquest of enemies. Oneiric. c. 249. In Ps. 7:12, it implies victory; signifying judgments laid up in store against oppressors.

To the Mogale the bow was the symbol of a king; and the golden bow the badge of royalty. (Herbelot, tit. Burak.)

An army in battle array was represented by the Egyptians by the hands of a man; the one hand holding a shield, and the other a bow. (Hor. Apoll. Hierogl. i. li. 5.)

It is probable, as Bishop Lowth has observed, that the term kasket, the bow, in 2 S. 1:18, is used as the title of the following elegy, so named either in memory of the destructive effect of the enemies' bows (see 1 S. 31:3), or from the bow of Jonathan peculiarly mentioned in the elegy itself, verse 22.

Bow is sometimes used to denote lying and falsehood. See Ps. 64:4. Ps. 120:4. Jer. 9:3.

It also signifies any kind of armor. The bow and the spear are most frequently mentioned, because the ancients used these most; Ps. 44:7. Ps. 46:10. Zch. 10:4. Jos. 24:12.

'The nations that draw the bow.' Is. 66:19. Bishop Lowth justly suspects a corruption of the text here. The Hebrew term for bow, kasket, is omitted in one MS., and the Septuagint takes no notice of it. The reading would then be, —

'To Tarsish, Pul, Lud, and Meshek, Tubal and Javan, the far distant sons;'

by Meshek, meaning the Moschi, or Muscovites, situated between the Euxine and Caspian seas.

Jer. 49:35.

'I will break the bow of Elam, The principal part of their strength.'

Isaiah, 90:6, says, 'And Elam bare the quiver.' Strabo also says, that the mountaineers of Elymais bred chiefly archers.

Ho. 7:16, 'A deceitful bow.' See the same expression in Ps. 77:57.

Virgil has, 'Perfidus ensis fragitur.'

Ra. 3:9, 'Thy bow was made bare,' i. e. drawn out of its case. The Oriental bows were wont to be carried in a case hung to the girdle.

Re. 6:2, 'And behold a white horse, and he that sat on him had a bow,' &c.; a figurative representation of the success and triumph of the Christian religion.

The blessing of Jacob on his son Joseph contains a passage, which may be properly adverted to, under this article. Ge. 49:23,

'Though sinful archers grieved him, Concocted with him, and harassed him, Yet his bow relaxed its force, and his arms thence its strength, Through the power of the mighty God of Jacob, Through the name of the Shepherd, the R-er of Israel, Through the God of his father, who assisted him, Through the Omnipotent, who blessed him.'

Stifful archers, lit. masters of arrows. He alludes no doubt to the insidious and persevering hatred of Joseph's brethren. See Geddes's version and note.

BRANCH. As trees denote great men and princes, so boughs, branches, sprouts, or plants, denote their offspring.

In conformity to which way of speaking, Christ, in Is. 11:1, in respect of his human nature, is styled a rod from the stem of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots; that is, a prince arising from the family of David. — See further on.

In the dream of Clytemnestra, in Sophocles' Electra, v. 18, &c., from the sceptre of Agamemnon, fixed by himself in the ground, a sprout arising, spreading and overshadowing all his kingdom, denoted that a young prince of his blood should arise, and dispossessing the tyrant Ægisthus of his government, should be settled in the kingdom, to govern and protect it.

To the same purpose is the dream of Naezreddin Sebektogh, cited by Herbelot, that a tree grew and increased insensibly out of his hearth in the middle of his chamber, which stretched out its branches all over the room, and, going out at the windows, did cover the whole house; all which is explained of his son's conquering the greatest part of Asia.

So in Cassiodorus Var. b. viii. Ep. 5, Balthus Germanus is a young prince of the Balthean race.

In Homer, δφος Ἀργος, a bough of Mars for a son of Mars, often occurs, as in his catalogue of ships, 11. ii. v. 47, 170, 211, 329, 349. And the like kind of expression is used in Pindar, Olymp. 3 and 6, and other Greek authors.

And so even in our English tongue, the word imp, which is originally Saxon, and denotes a plant, is used to the same purposes, particularly by Fox, the martyrologist, who calls King Edward VI. an imp of great hope; and by Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, in his dying speech, who has the same expression concerning the same prince.

That branch is the symbol of kings descended from royal ancestors, as branches from the root, see Ez. 17:3, explained by verse 19; Dan. 11:7. As the symbol of posterity simply, see Jb. 8:16.

A symbol of the Messiah. Is. 11:1,

'But there shall spring forth a rod from the trunk of Jesse, And a branch shall grow out of his roots.'

The prophet, as Lowth observes, having described the destruction of the Assyrian army, under the image of a mighty forest, represents, by way of contrast, the great person who makes the subject of this chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree — cut down — lopped to the very root, and decayed, which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. The aged trunk, denoting the royal house of David, at that time in a forlorn and contemptible condition, like a tree, of which nothing was left but a stump under ground.

Jer. 23:5,

'Behold, the days are coming, saith Jehovah, That I will raise up unto David a righteous branch, And a king shall reign and set up his throne, And shall execute judgment and justice in the land.'

From the Babylonish captivity to the coming of Christ, David was without a successor of his family, sitting upon the throne of Judah or Israel, in any sense whatever. And from the destruction of Jerusalem to the present time, the Jews have had neither a king nor a regular priesthood belonging to their nation. So that hitherto there has been a failure and interruption, both in the royal line of David, and in the sacerdotal one of Levi; both having merged in the kingdom of Christ, the son of David, which has been established over the true Israel of God, i. e. over all believers, whether Jews or Gentiles. Viewed in any other light, the prophecy must be considered to have failed of its accomplishment, or else an unusually long period has intervened, previous to its being fulfilled. Even admitting the possibility of the restoration of the families of David and Levi to their former privileges at some remote period still future, a long chasm would remain, during which no king or priest could be said to have presided, unless the supreme authority of the Messiah be allowed to have superseded all other.

The concluding clause of this verse is well paralleled by Is. 32:1. See also Is. 4:1, and compare ch. 45:8, where the same great event is set forth in similar images. See also Ps. 85:10-14, and Ps. 132:17. Lu. 1:69. Ro. 15:12. 2 Th. 2:8, as compared with Is. 11:10. Zch. 3:8,

'For behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch.'

This cannot mean Zerubbabel, though he was a descendant from David, for the terms here and elsewhere used are too magnificent to be applied to a person of his limited authority and influence. Besides, he was already 'brought forth,' whereas this passage points to some future personage, and that can be no other than the great Messiah, under whom the reign of peace and righteousness was to commence and to continue. The Hebrew term employed here is branch, whereas in Isaiah it is seed; the latter meaning a plant springing from the old root, and reserved when the tree is cut down — the former, a sprout, branch, or shoot.

Zch. 6:12,

'Behold the man, The Branch is his name, And he shall branch out from his place, And he shall build the temple of Jehovah, And he shall receive glory, And shall sit and rule upon his throne, And shall also be a priest upon his throne, And the counsel of peace shall be between these two.'

Here, again, the terms are too high for either Zerubbabel or Joshua, though something of a primary application to them may be admitted, yet the plenary fulfilment must be looked for in a greater than these.

It is well observed by Blayney, that this passage, strictly and literally translated, will not answer to any other but the Messiah, who was at once both king and priest, and, by uniting both characters in Himself, was completely qualified to bring about the counsel of peace or reconciliation between God and man.

Branch is the symbol of idolatrous worship. Ez. 8:17, 'And lo, they put the branch to their nose.' (Heb. Zemer.)

The carrying of branches, in the superstition of the Gentiles, and the custom of the Jews, was a sign of honor. And this it is that God complains of; they carried branches as if they did Him honor, but they held them to their noses like mockers; that is, they mocked Him secretly, when they worshipped Him publicly; they came with fair pretences and foul hearts; their ceremony was religious all over, but their lives were not answerable. Taylor's Worthy Communicant, ch. 5, sect. 3. See 70. Theodoton and Symmachus, as there cited.

Newcome renders it, 'And lo, they send forth a scornful noise through their nostrils.' This, he says, is the rendering of Aquila, Symmachus, and of some copies of the Septuagint. The Septuagint has it thus: —

'And lo, they are as if they were insulting me to my face.'

But, in favor of the common version, Dath says, that a late writer on the religion of Persia enumerates among the sacred fumes; a bundle of twigs, called Bersom in the old Persian language, which they hold in their hands while praying. Michaelis says, that they held it before their face opposite to the holy fire, and that it is represented in Pandora's Voyages, tab. 3. Spencer observes, that the heathens, in the worship of their deities, held forth the branches of those trees which were dedicated to them. See Soph. Oed. Tyr. act 2, 3, &c.

on which Professor Franklin has the following note: — 'When prayers and supplications were to be made, either in the temples or other places, the petitioners carried bouqs in their hands, bound round with fillets of white wool, this was always looked on as a mark of distress, which entitled them to a peculiar regard, rendered their persons sacred, and protected them from all violence. It is not improbable, but that this custom among the Greeks was borrowed from the Jews, whom we find carrying bouqs on solemn festivals.' See March ch. 13.

But as there seems no distress in the case mentioned in the text, but rather protection and imply, the rendering of Abu Newas appears preferable.

The Vulgate version is, 'They apply to branch to their nostrils,' which the learned Jerome explains by 'a branch of the palm-tree with which they adorned the idols.' The text (says Parkhurst on Zemer) seems plainly to allude to the Magian fire-worshippers, who Strabo tells us, b. 15, when they were praying before the sacred fire, held a little bunch of twigs in their hands.' See more in the same place. And Horne's Introd. v. iii. p. 35, & i.

Is. 14:19, 'An abominable branch' means a tree on which a malefactor has been hanged, for such were held in detestation. See Leviticus in Loc.

In Ez. 17:4, Jehoiachin is called the higher branch of a cedar, as being king.

Olive branches, Zch. 4:12. See under Olive. Branch of the vine, Jn. 15:2. 'Like the withered branches which are gathered for fuel and burnt.'

Branches are symbols of prosperity or calamity. 'Ramus creberrime' (says Glosinus p. 307) multique vocatus synonymis, utramque in legioribus, quibus prosperitas imagine crescentis virentis, videntur arboris propinquas; nec versa infelicitas ac calamitas imagine arboris marcescentis. Ge. 49:22. Ps. 15:28-31. Ps. 80:11, 12. Is. 25:5. Ez. 17:6. Ma. 4:1, &c.

BRASS. The symbol of incurability, hardness, and presumption or obstinacy in sin. See Is. 48:4, 'Because I knew that thou wast defiant, That thy neck was as hard as iron, And that thy brow was brass.'

Jer. 6:28,

'They are brass and iron, all of them, Instruments of adulation are they.'

Brass and iron are the baser metals used to adulterate the pure silver.

Ez. 22:18,

'They are all brass and tin, and iron and lead, In the midst of the furnace, They are even the dross of silver.'

Kingdom of brass. It is by this epithet that the Macedonian empire is described, in Ro. 2:39, in allusion to its warlike nature — the brass in these times being generally made of brass.

Mountains of brass. Zch. 6:1. It is difficult to say what these mean, unless we interpret, as Vitringa does, of those firm and immutable decrees by which God governs the world. The Psalmist has an expression resembling it, in Ps. 36:6, 'Thy righteousness is like the great mountains.'

Brass is also the symbol of strength. See Ps. 107:16. Is. 65:4.

Mt. 4:13,

'Thou here wilt I make iron, And thine house will I make brass.'

i. e. to overcome all enemies, and tread them down, as an ox the corn in threshing, when hoofs are shod with iron or brass. De. 20:31. 10:11.

So in Jer. 1:18, and 15:30, brass was denoted a strong and lasting adversary or opponent. De. 28:23, 'The heaven over thy head shall be brass,' &c.; i. e. rain shall be withheld, and the earth shall be barren.

Is. 45:2, 'I will break in pieces the gates of brass,' &c.; i. e. the brazen gates of the wall of Babylon, of which there were a hundred. See Herod. b. i. 179, 180.

Fine brass, or arsenicaleum, Re. 1:15-23. See Parkhurst's Greek Lexicon, on arsenicaleum.

BRAVE. Brave is, by the Onychocrota, explained of prud-ice. So the Indian, c. 74.

and the Persian and the Egyptian interpreters, make it the symbol of long life, riches, and victory, which are the effects and marks of wisdom.

The Greeks seem to have had the notion, that the breast was the seat of wisdom; for φρόνιμος, wise, with them came from φρένις, which are the præcordia, the parts of the breast about the heart; whence Juvenal, speaking of a dull youth, says, Sat. 7, v. 160, "quod læva in parte mamillæ nil salit Arcadico Juveni."

Na. 2:7.

* And her handmaids are carried away as with the voice of doves, (Sinking (or tabering) upon their breasts.)

As the tabret is beaten with the fingers, and those fingers are applied to a skin stretched over a hollow hoop, the description gives great life to the words of the prophet Nahum, who compares women beating on their breasts, in deep anguish, to their playing on a tabret. Harmer, l. 482.

Le. 7:30, "That the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before Jehovah."

The offerer's waving of the breast of the sacrifice to God, was typically giving up to Him the heart and affections; and this being afterwards allotted to the priest, reminded the believer that He only whom the priest represented, did ever, in his own person, make an entire and continual surrender of his heart and will to God. See Parkhurst on here.

BREASTPLATE. Breastplates are defensive arms, denoting and giving courage and undauntedness to those that use them; and, by reflection, striking terror and amazement into those they are employed against. Accordingly, to dream of finding or putting on a breastplate, is, with the Oneirocritics, c. 156, the symbol of joy for the destruction of enemies, &c.; 249, the symbol of riches to be obtained by valor.

The military cuirass or breastplate was made with rows or scales of metal placed on each other, for the better defence of the warrior. Homer has described one of these breastplates, as used by the Greeks at the Trojan war. Il. 11, l. 34, 35.

His rows of azure steel the work inside
Twice ten of tin, and twelve of ductile gold.

Pope.

In another place, Il. 13, l. 439, he calls a breastplate a vest of brass; and Virgil thus describes the armor of Turnus, Æn. 11, l. 487.

'Clad in a cuirass rough with brassen scales.'

The breastplate of the Jewish high-priest is particularly described in Le. 28:15, 39:8, &c. It contained the Urim and Thummim, Lights and Perfections; for an explanation of which, see Park. Heb. Lex. on er.

Isaiah beautifully characterizes the Redeemer of Israel, by saying, 53:17,

* And he put on righteousness as a breastplate,
And the helmet of salvation was on his head;
And he put on the garments of vengeance for his clothing,
And he clad himself with zeal, as with a mantle.

The language of Isaiah is in some measure copied by Paul in Ep. 6:14, 17, where the same terms are figuratively employed to point out the spiritual armor of true believers.

In 1 Th. 5:8, the language is altered, from the breastplate of righteousness, to the breastplate of faith and love. On both of which passages see Chandler.

In Re. 9:9, the mystical locusts are said to have 'breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron,' which agrees very well with the condition of the natural locust, which has about its body a pretty hard shell, of the color of iron: 'Armavit natura cutem,' says Claudian.

And in verse 17 of the same chapter, the horsemen are described as having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, or hyacinth, and brimstone, i. e. of red, blue, and yellow colors, denoting the terror of their appearance, when marching to war; probably referring to the Saracenic invasions and conquests in 713.

BRIMSTONE. The symbol of a perpetual torment and destruction.

Thus in Jb. 18:15, 'Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation;' i. e. his house or family shall be destroyed forever, by an inextinguishable fire.

Brimstone, q. d. burning stone, i. e. burning stone, was used by the heathen in their religious purifications. See Juvenal and Lucian, as quoted by Parkhurst on Scior; and God made it an instrument of his vengeance on the heathen and other delinquents. See Pa. 11:6. De. 29:23, and Ju. 7.

Isaiah, speaking of the enemies of the church, under the designation of Edom, and their destiny, 34:9, says,

* And her torrents shall be turned into pitch,
And her dust into sulphur;
And her whole land shall become burning pitch.'

And respecting Tophet, 30:33, his language is,

* For Tophet is ordained of old,
Even the same for the king is prepared:
He hath made it deep; he hath made it large;

A fiery pyre, and abundance of fuel,
And the breath of Jehovah, like a stream of brimstone, shall kindle it.'

Re. 9:17. See under BREASTPLATE.

See also Re. 14:10. 20:10. 21:8; in all which places there seems to be an allusion to the manner in which God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah.

BUILD. In the Oneirocritics, (Achmet's Coll. c. 145,) any kind of building implies settlement of a family, or acquisition of some new honor, kingdom, or power, and its peaceful enjoyment according to the subject; and, by consequence, a formal change of state.

And thus, in several places of Holy Scripture, the building of a city is in order to a quiet settlement.

The first that is said to have built a city is Cain, Ge. 4:17. This undoubtedly he did to comfort himself, and thus to take off the odium of being a vagabond, which God had inflicted on him. So that the said city he designed to be a full settlement, and he therefore called it Enoch, which signifies Dedication, or the beginning of a settlement; a dedication requiring a quiet possession and enjoyment for some time, as in De. 20:5. The manner of dedicating a house or city, was probably wont to be done with the solemnity of feasting, prayer, and singing of Psalms. See Ne. 12:27. Ps. 30: title.

The same may be said of the building of Babel; which was designed for a settlement, contrary to the command of God, as Josephus hints, who willed that mankind should then spread themselves by colonies. But, however, the building of that was pretended to be a settlement: 'Let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach to heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered over the face of the whole earth.' Ge. 11:4.

But further, that the building of a city is in order to a quiet settlement, is evident from the Psalmist, 'They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way, and found no city to dwell in,' Ps. 107:4; and verse 7, 'He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation,' or settlement; mosaboth, from tsabeh, which signifies not only to sit, but to stay, remain, persevere, or abide, as in Mi. 5:4. So also in 2 Ch. 14:6,7, it is said, 'And he built fenced cities in Judah; for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years, because the Lord had given him rest. Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities. — And he hath given us rest on every side.' All which imports that the building of a city is in order to settle in peace.

The same notion appears also in these verses of Virgil, Æn. 1, v. 251, &c.

'Hic tamen ille urbem,' &c.

'At length he founded Padua's happy seat,
And gave his Trojans a secure retreat;
Here fixed their arms, and there renewed their name,
And there in quiet rules, and crowned with fame.
But we, descended from your sacred line,
Entitled to your heaven, and rites divine,
Are banished earth, and for the wrath of one,
Removed from Latium, and the promised throne.'

Dryden.

So also in Æn. b. 8, v. 46:

'Hic locus ubi erit,' &c.
'This is thy happy home, the clime where fate
Ourselves is due to restore the Trojan state.'

To build or make a house, is sometimes a Hebraism, meaning to prosper a family. Thus, Ec. 1:21. And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he prospered their own families.

Ru. 4:11, 'Who did build the house of Israel;' i. e. who increased his family by a numerous progeny.

Ps. 89:4, 'I will build up thy throne to all generations;' i. e. I will perpetuate thy kingdom to thy posterity.

Is. 61:4,

* And they that spring from thee shall build up the ruins of old times;

They shall restore the ancient desolations:

They shall repair the cities laid waste;

The desolations of continued ages;

i. e. the Gentiles, so long a moral wilderness, shall be brought into the knowledge and service of the true God, like an ancient city rising from its ruins.

BULL. is sometimes used in Scripture metaphorically to represent violent and furious enemies. Thus, Ps. 22:12,

* Many bulls have compassed me,
Strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.'

The Chaldee has it, 'people like pushing bulls.'

The high-priests, scribes, Herod, Pilate, set against Christ.

Ezekiel uses the same phrase to point out 'the princes of the earth,' 39:18, where see Newcome.

De. 68:30, 'the multitude of the bulls,' &c. Puerell has an ingenious conjecture on this verse. He renders it thus:

* Rebuke the beast of the reed,
The congregation of bulls with the calves;

The people of the sea, who humble themselves before fragments of silver;
Scatter the people who delight in war.'

'By the beast of the reed (says he) is clearly meant the hippopotamus, which denotes the Egyptians. The company of bulls and calves is a plain allusion to their Aps and Serapis, or Isis and Osiris, which they worshipped, and to which the third hemistich refers, calling these idols contemptuously "fragments of silver," because overlaid or plated with that metal.

'They are called "the people of the sea,"' Isaiah describes their country (11:15) by the tongue of the Egyptian sea, and by the seven streams.

'They are called "a people that delight in war,"' where the Psalmist concludes, as he had begun, by requesting God to repress their fury.'

Jer. 50:26, 'Open her fattening stalls,' &c.; ver. 27, 'Slay all her bullocks,' &c. Fattening stalls mean the cities of Babylon, and her bullocks the inhabitants, who were pampered like beasts fattened for the slaughter.

The ancient heathen used to sacrifice bulls to Jupiter: thus Ovid, Metam. lib. 4, line 756,

'Taurus tibi, summe Deorum.'

Compare Virgil, Æn. 9, l. 627.

BURIAL. is an honor paid to the dead.

The want of it was always looked upon as a circumstance of the greatest misery. Ps. 79:1, 2, 3, Ec. 6:3. Potter's Arch. Græca, l. 2, l. 4, c. 1; and the denial of it, as an act of the greatest punishment, Arch. Græca, v. ii. p. 165. But the oneirocritics consider burial in another view, — as the consummation of all.

And therefore, not to be buried, in visions that portend good, is bad; and in such as portend bad, good.

And, therefore, in relation to such visions as portend bad, the Indian Interpreter, in ch. 130, says, 'That if any one dream that he is buried, his burial denotes that his utter ruin is certain. But if he dreams that any of the things which belong to his burial are want, — that deficiency portends good hopes of safety.'

Dead men in the grave are apt to be forgotten. Ps. 31:12. Ps. 88:6. And therefore, in Ps. 88:11, 12, the grave is synonymous to the land of forgetfulness; and in Ps. 34:17. Ps. 115:17. 1 S. 2:9, silence is put for the grave.

And in Ovid, Metam. b. 5, v. 356, Silentes, or men in silence, are dead men.

Hence, not to suffer a person to be put into the grave, denotes that he shall be remembered, and not be suffered to be put into eternal silence; the grave, in profane authors, being called an everlasting house. Soph. Antiq. l. 250. Cic. Tusc. Quest. 1, in fin.

On the contrary, the notion of the word monument, is opposed to the aforesaid notion of a grave as a place of silence, and land of forgetfulness. For men, considering the grave to be such a place, have endeavored to alter its property, by erecting monuments, which should record their names and actions to posterity.

And, in this sense, not to suffer a person to be put into a monument, denotes that means will be used in order to obliterate his memory, to the end that his actions may never be imitated, nor his cause revived.

So the word Sepulchrum (sepulchre), in Horace, Epod. 9, v. 26, is to be taken. 'Virtus sepulchrum condidit,' his valor hath raised him a monument, i. e. hath eternized his memory — hath gotten him perpetual renown.

And, therefore, to dream of having or building a tomb or sepulchre, is, according to Artemidorus, b. 2, 'a dream that portends good both to rich and poor; to a slave, that he shall obtain his freedom, — to a childless person, that he shall have an heir, — to a poor man, that he shall get an estate, — and to an unmarried person, a sign of marriage.'

Jer. 22:19, 'With the burial of an ass shall he be buried.'

Jehoiakim, being surprised in an ambuscade, and not slain, but made prisoner, 2 K. 24:5, was carried to the king of Babylon, who detained him in close custody till he could conveniently send him to Babylon. But his design being frustrated by his previous death, which happened soon after his confinement, Nebuchadnezzar, at once to testify his indignation against him, and perhaps to intimidate his successor from exasperating him by a long resistance, ordered his dead body to be ignominiously cast forth without burial before the walls of Jerusalem, as is foretold both in this passage and in 36:30.

BURN. The burning of heaps of armor was used by the Romans as an emblem of peace.

Isaiah has the same image, 24,

* For the graves of the armed warrior in the conflict,
And the garment rolled in much blood,
Shall be for a burning, even fuel for the fire.'

The Psalmist employs this image to express complete victory, and a perfect establishment of peace, Ps. 46:9.

He hath destroyed the artillery of war to the end of the earth.
He hath broken the bow, and snapped the spear short off,
He hath burnt the chariots in the fire.

Ezekiel, in his bold manner, has carried the image to a high degree of amplification. He describes the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained by the Israelites over Gog and Magog, 39:8-10. The victory was to be so great, that they should suffice for fires on the mountains and in the open fields for seven years.

Behold, it cometh to pass and shall be done, saith the Lord Jehovah:

This is the day whereof I have spoken.
And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth,
And shall set on fire and burn the armor, the shields and the bucklers,

The bows and the arrows, and the handstaves and the spears;

And they shall burn them with fire seven years;
So that they shall take no wood from the field,
Neither cut down any from the forest;

For they shall burn the armor with fire;
And they shall spoil those that spoiled them,
And shall plunder those that plundered them,
Saith the Lord Jehovah.

The burning bush (Ex. 3:2) was an emblem of the condition of Israel at that time; they were then in the fire of affliction, yet, by the divine Providence, they were not consumed in it, of which this vision was a pledge.

The spirit of burning, Is. 4:4, according to Lowth, means the fire of God's wrath, by which he will prove and purify his people; gathering them into his furnace, in order to separate the dross from the silver, the bad from the good. The severity of God's judgments, the fiery trial of his servants, Ezekiel (22:18-22) has set forth at large, after his manner, with great boldness of imagery, and force of expression. God threatens to gather them into the midst of Jerusalem as into the furnace; to blow the fire upon them, and to melt them.

Malachi (3:2,3) treats the same subject, and shows the same events under like images:

But who may abide the day of his coming?
And who shall stand, when he appeareth?
For he is like the fire of the refiner,
And like the soap of the fuller,
And he shall sit refining and purifying the silver;
And he shall purify the sons of Levi,
And cleanse them like gold, and like silver;
That they may be Jehovah's ministers,
Presenting unto him an offering in righteousness.

BYSS. The cotton plant, of which very fine white garments like linen were made. It grows in Palestine, in pods. It is the soft, downy substance formed in the inside of the pods of the shrub called Gossypium.

When David went to bring up the ark from the house of Obed-edom, he was clothed with a robe of byss, 1 Ch. 15:27. The same is described as the apparel of the rich man, Lu. 16:19. The garments of the Jewish priests were made of it. Byss garments were worn also by the Egyptian priests. See Plut. de Iside; Porphy. de Abstinent; Harmer's Obs. v. li. p. 358.

Hence a white byss garment, as being the most valuable, denotes, symbolically, the highest and most perfect holiness and prosperity. Thus the church of Christ is represented, under the character of the bride, as being arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, which fine linen (it is added) is the righteousness of saints, i. e. a divine nature and disposition, ornaments more valuable than the costly habits of Eastern princes, or of ancient priests. Re. 19:8.

Theocritus mentions byss as a clothing worn by women on festive occasions, Idyll. 2, l. 73.

Trailing a beauteous robe of byss.

C.

CALDRON. Ez. 11:3,

It is not near that we should build houses;
This city is the caldron, and we are the flesh;

i. e. the time is not near that we should build houses in a foreign land. Jer. 29:5. Here we shall die in mature age, as the choice pieces are not taken out of the caldron till they are perfectly prepared. The image is suggested by the process at the Jewish sacrifices. See 1 S. 2:13,14. In opposition to this, God says, ver. 7, that if Jerusalem is the caldron, it is the caldron of the slain; and, ver. 11, that it should not be the caldron of many, who were destined to flee and to perish in the extreme parts of their country. See 2 K. 25:6,7,21.

See the same image more expanded in 24:3,4,5, &c., where the good pieces and choice joints mean the great men of Jerusalem; the bones signify the meaner people, and the excrement denotes wickedness. The burning of the bones and of the pot refers to God's judgments, not only on the inhabitants, but also on the city.

CALF. The word calf, in Scripture style, is for most part so general as to be taken for the whole species; the word baker, which is often translated by βας, an ox, in the Seventy, being also frequently rendered by μοσχος, calf.

The symbol of the ox, calf, or steer, when there is no mention made of horns, is taken in general for what is signified by the whole animal; whose prime or chief quality is labor, patience, and riches, or the great product of corn.

So in the dream of Pharaoh, the seven kine denoted so many harvests; their number determining the years, which is peculiar to kine, as the Oniocracies all allow in ch. 238, 239.

In the Proverbs of Solomon, 14:4, it is said, 'Much increase is by the strength of the ox.' So that the ox has the signification of increase with great labor; and is, therefore, in De. 25:4, the symbol of the Jewish and of the Christian priesthood. It is there said, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn.' On which Paul remarks, 1 Co. 9:9, 'Doth God take care for oxen?' as if he had said, When God made this law, do you think that he had not a nobler design than that of barely showing kindness to the laboring beasts? Yes, surely, he designed that it should be applied to those who labor in the word and doctrine of his law; and who, by sowing among men spiritual things, deserve at least to reap from them the benefit of worldly things in return. The same place is applied to the same purpose by the apostle in Ti. 5:18.

Agreeably to the account now given, oxen, according to Artemidorus, b. 4, c. 58, are symbols of workmen and subjects, i. e. working for the good of others.

Ex. 32:4, 'Made it a molten calf,' &c.

The calf here must have been considered merely as a symbol, for the Israelites could not be so stupid as to believe, that the idol taken just before out of the furnace, had been their deliverer at any former period. The Psalmist speaks on this with due severity, Ps. 106:19,20.

'They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.'

Thus they changed their glory (i. e. God, the proper object of their adoration) into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.

Jer. 34:18, 'In presence of the calf, when they cut it in twain.' So it should be rendered. — In order to ratify the covenant, they killed a calf or young bullock, which they cut in two, and placing the two parts at some distance from each other, they passed between them; intending to signify by this rite, that they consented to be served in the like manner in case they violated their part of the covenant. Something of the like sort was a practice among the Greeks and Romans upon such occasions, as may be seen in Homer's Iliad, b. 3, 308, and Livy's Roman History, b. 1, c. 24, and b. 21, c. 46. Hence there will appear a peculiar force in the expression, of entering into the covenant, in presence of the calf, because the sight of that object served to remind them of the penalties they subjected themselves to, on violating their engagement. We find God conforming Himself to this usage, when He made a covenant with Abraham, Ge. 15:9,10,17,18. (Blayney.) Ho. 8:6, 'The calf of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.'

It is well known that animals of this species were worshipped in Egypt, (see Herod. b. 3, c. 28,) the apes at Memphis, and the mnevis at Heliopolis. As they are employed in tilling the ground, they may have been used as symbols of one who had anciently introduced or improved the art of agriculture. Males of this kind were dedicated to Osiris, and females to Isis. The Israelites may have originally borrowed this superstition from the Egyptians, and may have afterwards revived it; imputing the great fertility of Egypt to the deity thus represented.

Ho. 13:2, 'Let the men who sacrifice kiss the calves.'

See 1 K. 19:18. Thus Cicero describes a statue of Hercules as having 'ritum ejus ac mentum paulo attritum, quod in precibus et gratulationibus non solum adorare, verum etiam osculare solebant.' In Verr. act. 2, l. 4, §. 43.

Ho. 14:2, 'So will we render the calves of our lips.' More properly, that we may render the fruit of our lips.

See Newcome in loc. and Mede, p. 262.

CANDLESTICK, or LAMP-SCONE, according to Artemidorus, b. 1, c. 76, signifies a wife; for which, in c. 80, he gives this reason, viz. 'That as the lamp or the light thereof signifies the master of the house, because he overlooks it, so the lamp-scone signifies his wife, whom he rules and presides over.'

And weddings were celebrated in the Eastern countries with lamps or torches — the bridegroom and bride, the bridesmen and bridesmaids, having each one in their hands. And the same custom was among the Greeks and Romans. See Mat. 25:1, &c.

See Homer, Il. 6, v. 492; Eurip. Phœnias, v. 348; Medea, v. 1027. See also Virgil, Eclog. 8, v. 29.

Note. In all places in the Old or New Testament, where the words candle and candlestick occur, it should be invariably lamp and lampstand; for candles were not used in those days in Judea for lighting their houses.

We read in the book of Ex. 25:31,22, &c., of a candlestick of gold with seven branches, which Moses made by the command of God to be put in the tabernacle. To this allusion is made in Re. 1:10, where the seven candlesticks are declared to be the symbols of the seven churches; and the seven stars to be the symbols of the angels of those churches.

This, according to the difference of circumstances, says Daubuz, which is to be always carefully considered, is exactly agreeable to the explanation, which is given of the same symbols, by such of the most ancient Jewish writers as were well versed in the symbolical character and language.

For with them, a candlestick or lampstand was the symbol of the wife of the pair concerned; and stars were inferior princes, or governors ruling under a supreme.

Accordingly, the church, which is frequently represented by the symbol of a woman clothed or married to Christ, is here, as consisting of several particular churches, represented under the symbol of seven golden candlesticks.

And as Christ is the head, the high-priest, and king of his church, therefore are the twelve spiritual rulers of the church under him represented by stars.

In Re. 2:5, the angel of the church in Ephesus is exhorted to consider his ways, and threatened, if he should not, that his church or candlestick should be removed out of its place. And it is very remarkable, that at this time there is not so much as one Christian in that place which was once the famous city of Ephesus, and to which Paul wrote his Epistle.

In Re. 11:4, the two witnesses are termed 'the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth;' in allusion to Zephaniah and Joshua, as described by Zechariah, ch. 4.

Re. 2:1, 'Walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks,' (says Lowman,) is an expression taken from the office of the priests, in dressing the lamps, which was to keep them always burning before the Lord. Inevitably, therefore, walking here may be designed to signify not only a care to observe and know the true state of the churches, but moreover, to assist and promote their improvement in religion, or to assist the churches in their proper character, consecrated to the service of God, that they may shine as lights in the world, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation. Phil. 2:15.

CARCASS. Mat. 24:28, 'Wherever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.' That the carcass here is an emblem of the state of Judea, and the city of Jerusalem, at the time of their capture and desolation by the Romans, is generally acknowledged by interpreters.

The carcass, σπίς, a body fallen to the ground, as being deprived of life, is thrown out like that of some slain animals, unfit for use, to be preyed on by vultures, or other carnivorous fowls.

The transgressions of the Jewish people had risen to such a height, as to render them offensive in the eyes of God, like a corpse full of putridity. The language of their old prophets had become awfully applicable to them. Zephaniah well described them, 3:1, &c.

Woe to her that is rebellious and polluted, to the opprobrious city;
She hath not obeyed the voice,
She hath not received instruction;
In Jehovah she hath not trusted,
To her God she hath not drawn near.
Her princes in the midst of her are roaring lions;
Her judges are evening wolves;
They will not smite the morning.
Her prophets are light, they are treacherous men:
Her priests have polluted the sanctuary; they have valued the law.

And so in Ho. 4:1, &c.,

Hear the word of Jehovah, O ye sons of Israel,
For Jehovah hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land:

For there is no truth nor mercy,
Nor knowledge of God in the land:
In swearing, and lying, and killing,
And stealing, and committing adultery, have they built forth,
And blood reacheth unto blood.

Compare also Is. 50:21,22. Ma. 3:5.

Josephus gives a similar testimony, as to the witness to the degraded condition of his countrymen. See Bell. Jud. b. 6, c. 36. 'I think that had the Romans forbore to have punished so great criminals, either the earth would have swallowed up the city, or some deluge had drowned it, or else the thunder and lightning, which consumed Sodom, would have fallen upon it; for the people of Jerusalem were more impious than the Sodomites.'

Language resembling this is used respecting anti-Christian Babylon at a later period, Re. 8:5, 'For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities.'

A carcass thus thrown out is always attended with disgrace, as being without sepulture, which, amongst the ancients, was accounted an unhappiness. Thus in Ps. 79:1, &c., O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance, Thy holy temple they have defiled, They have laid Jerusalem on heaps. The dead bodies of thy servants they have given to be meat to the fowls of heaven, The flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth, Their blood they have shed like water round about Jerusalem, And there was none to bury them.'

So Virgil, Æn. b. 6,

'Eripe me his invito malis, et tu mihi terram infice.'

And Valer. Flac. Argon. b. 1,

'Diripiat lacerosque senem, nec membra sepulchro Cor tegat.'

And Virgil again, Æn. b. 10, v. 559,

'Non te optima mater,' &c.

'Lie there, inglorious, and without a tomb, Far from thy mother, and thy native home, Exposed to savage beasts, and birds of prey, Or thrown for food to monsters of the sea.'

And 2, Catullus in the Argonautica,

'Pro quo dilaceranda feras dabor, alitibusque Præda, nec injecta tumulorum mortua terra.'

Such a carcass was Jerusalem, the public offence of God and men, at the time when it was delivered up by divine justice to the Roman vultures. And such was the scorn with which he beheld, as to recall the language of Jeremiah, Lam. 2:15,16,

All that passed by the way have smitten their hands to- ward at thee;

They hissed and shook their head at the daughter of Jeru- salem, saying,

Is this the city that they call perfect in beauty, the delight of the whole earth?

All these enemies have opened their mouths against thee; They hissed and gnashed the teeth; they said, We have swallowed her up;

Surely this is the day which we looked for: we have found, we have seen it.'

To this carcass were gathered together the eagles, i. e. the Roman power. That eagles were the symbols of the Romans, is plain from their whole history. The Roman generals, as 'odious inform us, wore the figures of eagles interwoven with their shoes. Tarquin also carried a golden crown with an ivory scepter in the top of which was an eagle, the ensign of Roman power, which succeeding emperors adopted, as we learn from Dionysius, Livy, Plutarch, &c. Prudentius notices this, ih. de corona, p. 203,

'Aquila ex orbis sumptis arrogantiæ Gestator ejus.'

But the eagle was principally the symbol of the Roman army. They carried it on their stan- dards and military ensigns, either made of gold and silver, or embroidered on silk or linen. Hence Claudian says, lib. de Bell. Get.,

'Fuerit imbelles Aquilas servitibus armis.'

The Roman coins and medals still bear testi- mony to the use of this symbol. See Spanheim and others.

There is great propriety in comparing the Romans to eagles. The eagle is the king of birds, as Pindar, Ælian, and others, observe. Wherefore it was the common and suitable symbol of the most potent monarchs. At the time when Jerusalem was destroyed, Rome was mistress of a great part of the world, and Palestine in particular was subjected to her way. The Jews themselves confessed this, In. 19:15, 'We have no king but Cæsar.' Titus, then, was the imperial eagle, by whom the Jewish carcass was torn. Again, the eagle was by the law of Moses an unclean bird, Le. 11:13; it belongs to the rapacious kind, which was impure. De. 14:12. So the Roman nation was held to be impure by the Jews, and with whom they could have no intercourse, as appears from Jn. 18:29, 'they themselves went into Pilate's judgment-hall, lest they should be defiled.' Indeed, all the Gentile nations were considered to be impure, as being ad- dicted to idolatry, whence they were called legi, Re. 22:15.

Eagles were also the emblems of strength and swiftness; hence Saul and Jonathan are compared to them, 2 S. 1:23. And of the power of Moab it is said, Jer. 48:40, 'He shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab.' Compare Jer. 40:22. Da. 7:4. Ho. 1:1. Ez. 17:3, where the wings of eagles de- note strong armies. And the Roman army is alled by Daniel, 9:27, 'The wing of abomina- tions.' Such was Titus, who flew with a mighty force to Jerusalem, and made it his prey.

Its rapacity and partiality for carcasses is marked by Job, 39:30,

'Her young ones suck up blood, And where the slain are, there is she;'

passage on which our Lord is supposed to have had his eye, when he made use of the expression in Mat. 24:28. Such were the eagles who devastated Jerusalem, as affect- ingly described by Josephus, b. vi. c. 14, and elsewhere. 'The houses were full of dead women and infants; and the streets were filled with the carcasses of old men; and the young men, pale like ghosts, walked about the market- place, and fell down dead where it happened. And now the multitude of dead bodies was so great, that they who were alive could not bury them, nor indeed cared they for burying them, being now uncertain what should betide them- selves.'

The eagle was esteemed by the heathen as the minister of supreme Jove, and was sacred to him. Hence Horace, b. 4, ode 4, 'Qualem ministrum, fulminis alitem, cui Rex Deorum regnum in aëva vagus pernitit.'

'As the winged minister of thundering Jove, To whom he gave his dreadful bolts to bear, Faithful assistant of his master's love, King of the wandering nations of the air,' &c.

We see in coins the eagle holding the thun- derbolt in its feet, (as in Spanheim and others,) a fiction founded, as Pliny tells us, on the fancy that this is the only bird never destroyed by lightning; but more likely to have origina- ted in its remarkable swiftness. And the souls of the deified or consecrated emperors were believed to be transported to heaven by this bird.

So Titus was the minister of the true God, in his expedition against the Jews, acting as his executioner to inflict vengeance on that infidel and rebellious nation, because of their rejection of the Messiah, a fact which the Roman general himself acknowledged, as Josephus informs us: 'Surely God,' said he, 'hath assisted us in this war, and he it was that drove the Jews from these fortresses. For what could men's hands and engines prevail against them?'

King, in his Morels of Criticism, v. l. p. 394, gives a more extended meaning to the passage in Mat. 24: and paraphrases it thus:—

'Wherever, on the face of the whole earth, the corrupt mass of lawless, violent people, dis- turbing the peace and prosperity of all human society, is, there will those dreadful and an- gelic powers, who are to be the ministers of God's vengeance, on the great advent of our Lord, be assembled and appear.'

And he considers it to be an allusion to the prediction of the prophet Ezekiel in his 39th chapter. But I do not see the force of his reasonings.

See under EAGLES.

CEDAR is the symbol of a great king. See Ez. 17:3, where Jehoiachin is probably meant. And Ez. 31:3, where the top, or leader, is supposed to represent the king of Assyria, and the thick boughs his subordinate kings and rulers. His ruin is strikingly described in verses 12 and 13. Virgil has a similar com- parison with respect to the fall of Troy:—

'Rent like a mountain ash, which dreads the winds, And stood the sturdy strokes of laboring winds. About the roots the cruel axe resounds; The stumps are pierced with open repeated wounds. The root no more their upper load sustain, But down she falls, and spreads a ruin through the plain.'

Æn. b. 2, 226.

Zch. 11:2, 'Howl, O fir-tree, because the cedar is fallen.' Under these images, the fall of mighty men, and the subversion of the Jewish polity, are represented. See cher.

Is. 2:13, 'Even against all the cedars of Leb- anon.' See Lowth's excellent note on the passage.

See also Am. 2:9; Homer, Il. 13, 359; Hor- ace, Od. b. 4, 6; Virgil, Æn. 5, 447.

Is. 41:19, 'In the wilderness I will give the cedar,' &c., expressing the relief to be afforded to them, while fainting with heat in their journey through that hot country, destitute of shelter, by causing shady trees, and those of the tallest and most beautiful kinds, to spring up for their defence. The prophyl Baruch, speaking of the return from Babylon, expresses God's protection of his people by the same im- age: 'Even the woods, and every sweet smell- ing tree, shall overshadow Israel by the com- mandment of God.' 5:8.

This tree was the symbol of eternity, be- cause its substance never decays nor rots. Hence the ark of the covenant was made of cedar; and those are said to utter things worthy of cedar, who write that which no time ought to obliterate. It is used to point out persons of eminence, or men of power, who are often called in Scripture cedars of Lebanon, and of whom Isaiah says, 2:13, 'The day of the Lord shall come upon them.'

CHAIN signifies hindrance from action. So Artemidorus, b. 3, c. 35. See BIRD.

It is sometimes used figuratively in a bad sense, as in Ps. 73:6, 'Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain.' So Naumach. in sentiment. 'Neither do you wear on your neck the purple jacinth, and the green jasper, which make fools proud.' And Euripides, Electra, v. 176, 'Nor am I carried away with pride on account of my golden chains.'

Sometimes it is used in a good sense, as in Col. 3:14, where Paul calls 'love the bond or chain of perfectness,' or the perfect bond.

Ez. 7:23,

'Make a chain, For the land is full of bloody judgment, And the city is full of violence.'

'Make a chain,' to denote that the people will be led away captive in chains. It was a sym- bolic action. Ez. 16:11,

'I put bracelets upon thy hands, And a chain upon thy neck.'

Newcome says, rebed, in Arabic, denotes 'a variegated collar of wool hung for ornament about the neck of an animal.'

'I put bracelets upon thy hands, And a chain upon thy neck.'

Paul mentions his chain as a prisoner repeat- edly, viz. in Ac. 28:20. Ep. 6:20. 2 Ti. 1:16; i. e. Paul's right hand was fastened to the soldier's left hand, after the manner of the Ro- mans, with a long chain. The scholiast on Juvenal says, 'that it is called a camp-prison when the captives are delivered chained, so that the same chain fastens both the prisoner and soldier.'

Sometimes, for further security, they were bound to two soldiers, with two chains, as was Peter's case. See Ac. 12:6. See also Pliny, b. 10, ep. 30; Seneca, ep. 5; and liber de Tran- quill. c. 10.

Fr. 1:9, parental instruction is beautifully compared to chains about the neck. One of the rabbinical writers has a similarly elegant expression, Vajier Rabb. § 12. 'The words of the law are a coronet to the head, a chain to the neck, tranquillity to the heart, and a col- lyrium to the eyes.' The Egyptian judges used to wear a golden chain about the neck, with a gem suspended, on which was engraved Truth. Diod. Sic. b. 1.

That eminent persons were thus adorned is plain from the honors paid to Joseph and Dan- iel, Ge. 41:42, and Da. 5:7,16,29. Brides also received these as parts of their attire, as appears from Song 1:10, and 4:9. Felden, in his Uxor Hebræa, quotes from the Gemara Hierosol. this passage: 'Velamina sponsæ sunt sindones acupitæ, quibus appenduntur monilia aurea.' Penelope also re- ceives a gold chain from her suitor Euryma- chus, as Homer tells us. And Hesiod, describ- ing the dress of a virgin, in his 'Works and Days,' v. 74, says, 'They put golden chains upon her person.' Ornaments of gold, and particularly chains, belong to the costume of very high antiquity. 'Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights; who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.' 2 S. 1:24. Judith 10:4.

CHARIOT. Chariots are the symbol of government, protection, and guardianship, exercised by princes, and by those who resemble them, towards the people, their inferiors.

In this sense, Elisha exclaimed, respecting Elijah, the eminent prophet and teacher of Is- rael, 2 K. 2:12, 'O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof; an exclamation repeated by Joash the king of Israel, on occasion of the death of Elisha, 2 K. 13:14;—meaning, that these two excellent men availed more to their countrymen by their prayers and pious example than the kings of the nations do by their warlike chariots and horsemen. Compare Ez. 27:14 with Re. 18:13, where chariots and horsemen are enumerated among the wares of Tyre and Babylon, as be- ing part of their wealth and support.

Chariots are the symbol of armies and their leaders. See Ex. 15:4, 'Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea.' 2 K. 18:24, 'Wilt thou put thy trust in Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?' is the language of Rabshakeh; and that of his master is thus represented, 2 K. 19:23, 'With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon.' Ps. 20:8,

'Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; But we will remember the name of Jehovah our God. They are brought down and slain; But we are risen and stand upright.'

Compare Ps. 76:7. Is. 27:31. So Jer. 50:37, 'A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots.' See also Jo. 2:5. Mt. 5:10.

Chariots are also the emblems of the heavenly host. This we learn from 2 K. 6:17, where the mountain round Elisha appeared, to the opened eyes of his servant, full of horses and chariots of fire. This appears also from Ps. 68:16, 'The chariots of God are also two myriads, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place.' This seems to look back on De. 33:2,

'Jehovah came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir to them; He shined forth from mount Paran,

And he came with ten thousand of his holy ones;
From his right hand went a fiery law for them.
Something similar is the language of Isaiah,
66:15,

'For behold, Jehovah shall come as a fire,
And his chariot as a whirlwind,
To breathe forth his anger in a burning heat,
And his rebuke in flames of fire.'

And so in Ha. 3:8,

'Was thine indignation against the seas,
When thou didst ride on thine horses, and on thy chariots of deliverance?'

A description of the royal chariot of Solomon is given in Song 3:9,10, which shows the luxury of those times; but it probably means a litter or palanquin.

In 1 Ch. 28:18, 'Gold is said to be given for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims.'
See CHERUBIM.

The chariot mentioned in Is. 21:7, with two riders, is supposed to represent Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians. See Louth in loc.

The four chariots in Zech. 6:1, drawn by horses of different colors, represent the four great empires of the world in succession, the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, distinguishable both by their order and attributes. Blayney.

Song 1:9,

'I have compared thee, O my love,
To a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.'

The comparison of a beautiful woman to a set of horses harnessed in a chariot, may perhaps appear uncouth to the refined manners of this age; but the Greek and Latin poets abound in similar comparisons. Thus Lycophron calls Helen a heifer, and Euripides calls Polyxena a calf, and Horace compares a young woman to a mare, lib. 3, ode 2. See Durell on the passage.

Chariots on our side denote courage in us, and safety and skill, with success in feats of arms. But if they belong to the other side, then, by the rule of contraries, they denote dread and consternation, and ill success in war.

CHERUBIM. Much has been written on this mysterious subject, particularly by the Hutchinsonian divines, whose opinions may be seen in Parkhurst's Hebrew Lexicon on the term.

The cherubim are mentioned or described in the following passages, viz. Ge. 3:24. Ex. 25:18, 22, and 37:7,9. Le. 16:2. Nu. 7:49. 1 K. 6:23,29, and 8:7. 2 Ch. 3:10,13, and 5:8. Ez. 1:5,11, and 10:2,21.

They are again alluded to in Is. ch. 6.
Re. ch. 4. Wisd. 9:8. He. 9:5.

It is agreed by most expositors that they were emblems of something beyond themselves; but the question is, Of what were they emblematic?

Parkhurst says they represented the ever-blessed Trinity, and the human nature of Jesus Christ.

Lowman thinks they represent angels.

In Ge. 3:24, they are spoken of as posted at the entrance of Paradise, after Adam and Eve were expelled from it.

Taylor, in his Hebrew Concordance, says the cherubim must be considered as hiero-glyphical, denoting the perfection or combination of all spiritual and moral excellences, which constitute the character of God's faithful servants or subjects.

Newcome is of Taylor's opinion.

Mede supposes them to be angels, but considers the cherubim, or four living creatures in the Apocalypse, to represent the Christian churches in the four regions of the world, corresponding to the four standards of Israel, and their ensigns, which, he says, were those of a lion, an ox, a man, and an eagle.

Doddridge considers them to be hieroglyphical representations of the angelic nature, and condemns the Hutchinsonian scheme, which makes them emblems of the Deity, as a very great absurdity.

Reynolds (of Angels) thinks the four animals described in Re. 4:7, represent spirits of an order superior to angels, taken up wholly in contemplation.

Pierce, Whitby, and Macknight all consider them as representations of angels.

Gladius, Philol. Sacra, p. 777, after quoting a singular opinion of Musculus, who supposes them to have been a species of large and terrible fowls, because they are described as wined, says, 'But most other interpreters by the cherubim understand the angels of God.'

Milton refers to this symbolical representation, when he says of the cherubic shapes,—

'Nor less on either side tempestuous fell
His arrows, from the four-fold winged fowls,
Instinct with eyes; and from the living wheels,
Instinct alike with multitude of eyes.'

Par. Lost, b. 6.

But, with due deference to the fore-named authors, may we not suggest the probability, that these cherubim neither represented angels nor divine subsistences, but were simply the accompaniments of the chariot-throne of the Deity?

God is described as a King, and, in accommodation to our ideas, he is spoken of as exhibiting regal state, and as occupying a throne or royal seat, which at times is stationary, but which, when put in motion, in accordance with the infinite activity attributed to the Supreme Being, is set before us as surrounded by wonderful forms, supported by various emblematic figures, and attended with the greatest pomp and splendor of divinity. We are confounded by the noise of the restless wheels, awed by the vision of innumerable eyes, and dazzled by the brightness of the celestial fire which shines around it. Milton has very well copied the prophet's description, Par. Lost,
b. 6, l. 750,

'—Forth rushed with whirlwind sound

The chariot of paternal Deity
Flashing thick flames, a wheel within wheel undraws;
Itself instinct with spirit; but conveyed
By four cherubic shapes; four faces each
Mild wondrous; as with train their bodies all,
And wings were set with eyes, with eyes the wheels
Of beryl, and careering fire between.'

In 1 Ch. 28:18, the form of this throne is referred to, where it is said, 'He gave gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubims, that spread out their wings,' &c.

In Ps. 68:17, these chariots are described as numerous, as if the angels also occupied such, when they attend in procession on the Deity.

In 2 S. 21:11, and Ps. 18:10, which are corresponding scriptures, God is said 'to ride upon a cherub, and to fly,' i. e. perhaps in a cherubic chariot.

As the description here given is that of a violent storm, all the elements being in commotion, and all things carried along with great rapidity, so the language employed is intended to express the vehemence, celerity, and magnificent effect of the divine movements and appearance.

The Chaldee renders it thus:

'He was revealed in his majesty over the swiftest cherubim,
And he rode valiantly on the wings of the wind.'

In allusion to the cherubic figures which cover the mercy-seat, where the 'glory' or Shechinah appeared, God is repeatedly described as 'the Lord which dwelleth between the cherubim,' for, whether stationary or in motion, these seem to be his attendants.

There is a singular passage in Ex. 28:14,15, where he compares the king of Tyre to 'the anointed cherub that covered the ark of the covenant.' Newcome thus translates it:

'I made thee as the anointed covering cherub;
Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God;
Thou didst remain amidst the stones of fire;
Thou wast perfect in thy ways, from the day when thou wast born,
Until iniquity was found in thee.'

In this lamentation, wisdom, beauty, magnificence, splendor, and perfection are attributed to the king of Tyre. He likewise bore an exalted and sacred office. On these accounts he is compared to one of the angelic orders.

Mr. Louth thus paraphrases the passage:
'Such was thy eminent distinction, that thou wast, as it were, placed in the temple of God, on his holy mountain. Thou wast, as it were, conversant among the twelve precious stones on the breastplate of the high-priest, which shone like fire.' Whenever God, who dwelt between the cherubim, was approached, the high-priest wore his breastplate. Ex. 28:30.
1 S. 28:6.

CITY. A city and its inhabitants are frequently described in the sacred writings under the similitude of a mother and her children.
Hence the phrase, 'children of Zion,' in Jo.
2:23. As the temple was situated on mount Zion, hence the city of Jerusalem came to be denoted by it, because a principal part of it.
See the same expression, Pa. 149:2. Thus, also, Horace:

Rome principis urbem
Dignatur nobilis inter amabiles
Vatum poete me choros.

Carm. b. 4, ode 3.

Cities are characterized as virgins, wives, widows, and harlots, according to their different conditions. Thus:

Jerusalem is called a virgin, in Is. 37:22.
Jer. 18: La. 1:15, and other places; and Egypt is so named in Jer. 46:11.

Babylon is called a widow, in Is. 47:8,9, and Jerusalem, in Is. 1:1. And the term harlot is used of Jerusalem, Is. 1:21; of Tyre, Is. 23:16;
of Nineveh, Na. 3:4; and of Samaria, Ez. 23:5.

When a body politic comes under the symbol of an animal, and is so considered as one body, the head thereof, by the rule of analogy, is its capital city. Thus in Is. 7:8,9, a capital city is a head, and taken for all the territories belonging to it.

And the Roman authors affected to call Rome the head of the world. See Ovid, Met.
b. 15, v. 435; Liv. Hist. b. 21, c. 30; Pliny,
Nat. Hist. b. 3, c. 5; Val. Max. b. 8, c. 14.

By the same rule cities, inferior to the general head, are themselves capital cities, and therefore heads to their respective provinces.

See under MOTHER.

GREAT CITY. See under BABYLON.

Nu. 22:39, 'And Balaam went with Balaak, and they came to a city of streets.' Karay-kashah, in our version. The Vulgate has, 'a city which was in the remotest bounds of his kingdom.'

CLOTHED. To be clothed, is a metaphor frequently used to signify, to be accompanied with, adorned, covered, or protected; as Job.
7:5, 'My flesh is clothed with worms.' Job.
39:19, 'Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?' Or, as Durell renders it, with prut.
Ps. 35:28, 'Let them be clothed with shame and dishonor.'

Ps. 93:1,

Jehovah is clothed with majesty,
Jehovah is clothed with strength.'

Paul also uses it in 9 Co. 5:2, 'Desiring to be clothed with our house which is from heaven.'

And in Ro. 13:14, 'Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ.'

In Jud. 6:34, 'The Spirit of the Lord came upon (lit. clothed) Gideon.'

1 S. 17:5, 'Goliath was clothed with a coat of mail.'

Ps. 65:13, 'The pastures are clothed with flocks.'

In reference to the term clothed as applied to divine influence, we find in Lu. 24:39, 'Turn ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued or invested, ἐνδυσθῆτε, with power from on high.' And by a like phrase, the Spirit is said to rest upon Christ and his disciples, Is. 11:2.
1 Pe. 4:14.

CLOUD. A cloud, without any token, showing it to be like a storm, always denotes what is good, and implies success.

It is in general the symbol of protection, because it preserves from the scorching heat of the sun, i. e. anguish and persecution; and as it likewise distils a rain of cool and benign influence. It is thus used by Horace, b. 1, ode 2,
v. 31; and by Homer, II. 5, v. 185.

And therefore in Sophocles' Electra, p. 134, δραχμας νεκροῦ, a cloudless evil, is an unavoidable mischief, from which nothing can protect, as the author himself explains it.

Clouds, by the Indian Interpreter, c. 153, are explained of wisdom.

In the next chapter, a king's riding upon the clouds, is interpreted by the Persian and Egyptian, of foreign nations serving him—of his ruling over them—and of his being exceedingly prosperous and successful.

In the holy writers, the clouds are frequently the symbols of God's power. Thus Ps. 68:34,
'His strength is in the clouds,' though strictly speaking, the term here rendered clouds means the ether or air. See also 2 S. 22:12. Ps.
104:3. Na. 1:3.

Ps. 88:6, 'Who is he in the clouds that can be compared to Jehovah?'

Clouds are more especially the symbol of multitudes and armies, as in Jer. 4:13,

'Behold, like clouds he shall come up,
And as a whirlwind his chariot.'

meaning the person designed by the firm and the destroyer of nations, namely, the king of Babylon.

Is. 60:8,

'Who are these that fly like a cloud,
And like doves upon the wing?'

The following is Erasmus's note upon the passage: 'The clouds fly aloft, that they may moisten and render fruitful the earth below.
Even so the ministers of the gospel, raised far above terrene desires, and bordering upon heaven, replenish the grovelling and sterile minds of men with the rain of the heavenly word, that, the thorns and briars being cleared away,
they may bring forth fruit worthy of God.
They fly like clouds, every where diffusing the grace of the gospel; but they fly, too, like doves to their windows; for they make not their abode in the ground, but in the hollow of some lofty rock, that, by their continual sighs and prayers, they may excite the grovelling mind to a love of the heavenly life.'

He. 12:1, 'Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses,' &c.— a very just comparison, seeing that clouds are composed of innumerable drops of rain or watery vapor. So in the poets, multitudes are compared to clouds. As in Homer, II. 4, v.
273, a cloud of fowls is a great company of footsoldiers. And Livy has, a cloud of infantry and horsemen; and Epiphanius, a cloud of fies, and Jerome, a cloud of locusts. Ajax, in Homer, calls Hector the cloud of war. Virg.
makes Æneas sustain the cloud of war—

'Sic obrutus angustis
Æneas, nubem belli, dum detinet, omnis
Sustinet.'

Æn. 10, 938.

To these may be added a passage from Justin, where the growing power of the Romans is compared to a rising cloud: lib. 99, c. 3, 'Videri se ait convergentem in Italia subem illam rucis et cruenti belli, videre tonantem ac fulminantem ab occasu procellam, quam in quasvisque terrarum partes victorie tempestas delegerit, magno cruoris imbre omnia fedaturam.'

A white cloud is a symbol of good success to him who is assisted by it, and is therefore examined of prosperity by Artemidorus, in book 2.

Peter compares seducers to clouds carried about with a tempest, 2 Pe. 2:17, setting forth by this similitude the inconstancy of their doctrine, and fickleness of their dispositions, as well as their deceitfulness, like clouds that promise rain, and yet are scattered without yielding any. See Ju. 12.

Solomon compares the infirmities of old age, which arise successively one after another, to clouds returning after rain, Ec. 12:2.

Is. 4:5. There is a manifest allusion to the pillar of cloud and of fire which attended the Israelites in their passage out of Egypt, and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle. The prophet Zechariah applies the same image to the same purpose, 2:5.

'And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about, And a glory will I be in the midst of her;'

i. e. the visible presence of God shall protect her.

In Pr. 16:15, the favor of a king is compared to 'a cloud of the latter rain,' refreshing and fertilizing the earth.

The sudden disappearance of threatening clouds from the sky is beautifully employed in Is. 44:29, as a figure for the blotting out of transgressions. Demosthenes has a passage like it, which was admired by Longinus, as quoted by Lowth, 'This decree made the danger, then hanging over the city, to pass away, like a cloud.'

Re. 1:7. The majesty of Christ's appearance is described by saying, 'Behold he cometh with clouds,' by which some understand, not literal clouds, but the angels of the host of heaven. See Da. 7:13. Mat. 24:30.

Re. 10:1, 'And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud.' To come in the clouds or with the clouds of heaven, is among the Jews a known symbol of divine power and majesty. Grotius observes a like notion among the heathen, that they represented their deities appearing covered with a cloud,—

'Tandem venias, precamur, Nube candelentur humeros amictus,
Augur Apollo.'

In Ps. 97:2, 'Clouds and darkness' appear to be put as representing the mysterious nature of the divine operations in his government of the world.

A day of clouds is taken for a season of calamity, as in Ez. 30:3, 34:12. Jo. 2:2. Zph. 1:15, a metaphor for which the poet uses,

'Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris.'

Is. 19:1.

'Behold, Jehovah rideth
On a swift cloud, and cometh to Egypt;'

intimating the speediness of the divine infliction on that country. Clouds in Egypt are generally regarded as inauspicious, since they are rare in that climate, the overflowing of the Nile sufficing for humidity.

Re. 14:14, 'And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the Son of man.'

Christ himself seems here represented, sitting upon a bright cloud, which was spread under him, as a seat of judgment.

Zch. 10:1,

'The Lord shall make bright clouds;'

or rather,

'Jehovah will make ready the lightnings.'

See Newcome.

La. 3:44.

'Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud,
That our prayer should not pass through.'

God is said at all times to dwell in light inaccessible; and when He is described, as here, covering Himself with a cloud, it means his unwillingness to admit sinners to communion with Him—to them He cannot be propitious, nor can He have any commerce with them, because they despise his forbearance.

COLOR. Color, which is outwardly seen in the habit of the body, is symbolically used to denote the true state of the person or subject, to which it is applied, according to its nature.

Black. See under Black.

Pale signifies diseases, mortality, and afflictions arising from them. It is a usual epithet of death. 'Pallida mors,' say the poets. Hence the pale horse, in Re. 6:8, has death for his rider, and the grave for his attendant, and a commission is given to him to slay the fourth part of the earth, i. e. of the heathen Roman empire, by the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts,—a commission which is supposed to have been executed during the reigns of Maximus, Decius, Gallus, Volucian, and Valerian. St. Cypryan notices this period in his apology to Demetrius the proconsul, and expressly declares his judgment, that these great calamities were according to former predictions, and brought upon the world, not because the Christians rejected the idolatrous Roman worship, but because the Romans rejected the worship of the true God.

Red denotes joy, with or after a great battle or slaughter. In Ps. 68:23, red and blood are explanatory of each other. Is. 1:18, 'Though your sins be red like crimson.'

'Neque amissos colores
Lana referet amictus fuso,' says the poet, applying the same image to a different purpose. To discharge these strong colors is impossible to human art or power; but to the grace and power of God all things, even much more difficult, are possible and easy. See Lowth in loc.

Is. 63:2, 'Wherefore is thine apparel red, and thy garments as one that treadeth the wine-vat?' See Lowth on the passage, and comp. Re. 19:13, &c.

Zch. 1:8, 'I saw in the night a man riding on a red horse;' i. e. an angel in the shape of a man. See v. 11, and Lu. 24:4, 'Three horses follow him, red, dun, and white, whose riders were angels.' They have horses, to show their power and celerity; and horses of different colors, to intimate the difference of their ministries. See Re. 6:4.

In Zch. 6:2, the red horses are understood to denote the bloody Assyrian empire; but see Newcome.

Re. 12:3, Satan or Antichrist is represented by a great red or blood-colored dragon, to describe both his power and cruelty in opposing true religion.

White, the symbol of beauty, comeliness, joy, and riches. Est. 8:15, 'Mordecai went out in white apparel.' Ec. 9:8, 'Let thy garments be always white.'

White clothes are not only the pleasantest in a warm country, as was Palestine, but also the most expensive, as they cannot be worn so long as those of other colors; luxury is therefore here combined with cost.

This color, as being of great lustre, and as denoting purity, is attributed to the Ancient of Days in Da. 7:9, to Jesus Christ in Re. 1:14, to the gods of angels in several places, and to the throne of God in Re. 20:11.

White or shining garments are marks of favor and honor; under the law, they were the garments of the priests, and worn in the courts of princes. Thus Pharaoh honored Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen, as well as putting a gold chain about his neck. Ge. 41:42. A white garment, as the emblem of purity, is promised to the church at Sardis. (Re. 3:4,) and is interpreted of the righteousness of saints. (Re. 19:8,) as well as a mark of honor. Whence we see the propriety of this emblem, to express the peculiar honor and favor God would show to them who remained constant and faithful in the purity of the Christian doctrine, worship, and life.

COLUMN, or PILLAR. These, it is well known, were erected anciently to commemorate great exploits or extraordinary events. When connected with a building, they might be called emblems of stability; but when standing alone, they were memorial monuments, to record matters that were useful, whether legislative or historical: 'James, Cephas, and John, who seem to be pillars,' that is, supporters of the edifice of the church, considered as a building,—'the pillar and basis of truth,'—this last seems to refer to a monument on which something is inscribed. The 10th Psalm, in the Greek version, has for its title ἑρμολογία, an inscription on a pillar, as if that psalm related to a conqueror, whose triumphs were recorded. We know who the victor was who is there commemorated.

The custom of consecrating stones among the heathen seems to have taken its rise from Jacob's setting up the stone which he had put for his pillow, and pouring oil upon the top of it, and afterwards calling the place Bethel or Bit-ul, the house of God, Ge. 28:18. From this the learned Bochart insists, that the name and veneration of the sacred stones, called Betyl, so celebrated in all pagan antiquity, were derived. These Betyli were stones of a round form, and were consulted, on particular occasions, as a kind of divine oracles; affording a proof, among many others, how closely the pagan world imitated, and how basely they perverted, the religious rites of the ancient patriarchs. Thus the setting up of a stone by Jacob, in grateful memory of a celestial vision, and as a monument of the divine goodness, which had so conspicuously guarded him in his journey, probably became the occasion of all the idolatry paid, in succeeding ages, to those shapeless masses of unheaven stones, of which so many astonishing remains are scattered up and down the Asiatic, and even the European, world. See Maurice, v. ii. p. 356.

CROCODILE. The term does not occur in our English version, nor yet in the Septuagint, except in one instance, viz. in Le. 11:23, where, instead of the tortoise, the Seventy has the crocodile. The Hebrew here has teb.

That the Hebrew teb and lousten signify the crocodile, has been maintained by several writers of authority. See Harmer's Observ. v. iv.; Bochart's Hieroz.; Scheuchzer's Physica Sacra; Scott on Job; Durell, Parkhurst, and others.

The principal passages in which the term occurs in this sense, are the following:

Jb. 7:12,

'Am I a sea, or a crocodile (teb), that thou settest a watch over me?'

Harmer so explains it, Observ. v. iv. p. 286, and remarks that the Egyptians watched the crocodile with great attention, to prevent its doing mischief.

Jb. 3:8,

'Let them execrate it, who curse the (natal) day
Of those who are about to rouse up the crocodile (lousten).'

which was almost sure to be attended with immediate and horrid destruction. See Jb. 41:8, 9, 10.

Is. 27:1,

'In that day shall Jehovah punish with his sword,
His well-tempered, great, and strong sword,
Leviathan the winding serpent,
Leviathan the rigid serpent,
And shall slay the crocodile (teb) that is in the sea.'

Is. 51:9,

'Awake, awake, clothe thyself with strength, O arm of Jehovah,
Awake, as in the days of old, the ancient generations;
Art thou not the same that smote Rahab, that wounded the crocodile (teb)?'

In allusion to God's victory over Pharaoh, as appears from the 10th verse.

Ez. 29:3,

'Thus saith the Lord Jehovah:
Lo, I am again at thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt,
The great crocodile (teb), that lieth in the midst of his rivers,
That saith, My rivers are mine own, and I have made them for myself.'

Pharaoh, elsewhere called Hophra, and by Herodotus, Apries, is supposed to be meant here, of whom that historian affirms, b. 2, § 169, 'This is said to have been the persuasion of Apries, that no god was able to deprive him of his kingdom;—' language which well agrees with the vain boasting used above.

When he says rivers, in the plural, he probably refers to the seven mouths of the Nile, to the streams which emptied themselves into it, and the channels or canals that were cut from it.

Ez. 32:2,

'Say unto Pharaoh, king of Egypt:
Thou art like a lion among the nations,
Thou art as a crocodile (teb) in the sea,
And breakest forth in thy rivers,
And troublest the waters with thy feet, and foulest thy rivers.'

From these and other passages, it appears that the term which our English translators render 'dragon,' is applied, not merely to the serpent tribe, but to any large or ferocious creature, which in its form or qualities resembles the serpent, such as the crocodile of the Nile.

In Ps. 74:13, where Asaph says,

'Thou didst divide the sea by thy strength,
Thou didst break the heads of the crocodiles (tebim) in the waters,' there is a plain allusion to the destruction of the power and host of Pharaoh at the Red Sea. To which we may also refer Ps. 68:30, where instead of 'Rebuke the wild beast of the reed,' i. e. the crocodile, which lurks among the reeds of the Nile, and is a common figure of the kings of Egypt.

The crocodile, then, is the symbol of Egypt, and appears as such on Roman coins. In Scheuchzer's Physica Sacra may be seen a medal, with Julius Caesar's head on one side, and on the reverse a crocodile, with this inscription: Ἐγύπτου capta, i. e. Egypt taken.

There is also a coin of Augustus, representing a crocodile chained to a palm-tree, with the inscription, 'COL. NEP.', in memory of Egypt being taken by Augustus after Antony.

A crocodile fastened with a chain to a palm-tree, is to be seen on ancient coins, with the inscription, 'COL. EO.', i. e. Colonia Ægyptus. On the other side are two human heads, of which one looks to the east, ornamented with a naval crown,—the letters above are Imp., whereby by the crocodile is signified Egypt, and Imp. is Imperator, or Augustus. The two heads are those of Augustus and Agrippa, of whom Virgil says,

'Tempora navali fulgent rostrata corona'

When the painter Neceles, whom Pliny mentions, wished to paint the naval engagement of the Egyptians and Persians, which took place in the Nile, he described that by a hieroglyphic, which he could not accomplish by art. He drew a young ass drinking on the shore, and a crocodile lying in wait for it.

But since Egypt, in prophetic language, is a type of the antichristian power, which is spiritually called Egypt, in Re. 11:8, we may, without impropriety, extend several of these Old Testament references, and apply them to the character, language, and future destinies of that power.

In Re. 13:1, Antichrist is compared to a 'beast rising up out of the sea,' in allusion to the crocodile, which is amphibious.

For a more particular description of the crocodile, see Jb. ch. 41, and Bochart's Commentary; also Norden's Travels, Hasselquist's Voyages, Harmer's Observations, 4th vol., and Sir George Staunton's Embassy to China, vol. 1.

That the crocodile was anciently, among the Egyptians, a symbol of the sun, appears from its figure on the throne of Isis, as has been shown by several authors, and agrees with what Jamblichus writes on the Egyptian mysteries, and Eusebius, in his Preparatio Evang. lib. 3, cap. 3.

Among the Indians on the Malabar coast, crocodiles were accounted the ministers or avengers of the divine justice. And the boats of the Siamese, in which they carry out their dead, exhibit the figure of a crocodile.

Lucian, Philo, and Horapollo represent the crocodile to have been the emblem of craft, malice, and impudence; and Clemens Alexandrianus attributes to it the latter quality, especially in his Stromata, lib. 5.

Bochart and others maintain, that Peres, or Pharaoh, in the ancient language of Egypt, signifies 'crocodile;' while Josephus and Fleischer say, that it properly means 'king,' or 'my king,' which, however, appears doubtful, since we often find, in Scripture, the title of king annexed to Pharaoh, which in that case would be a vain tautology. It may be remarked, that peres, in Hebrew, among its other meanings, has that of 'starting aside or apostatizing from the true religion and worship;' in which case, Pharaoh may be considered as equivalent to apostate.

That crocodiles were formerly objects of worship, on account of the fear entertained of them by the common people, is well known. See Elian de Animal. lib. 10, cap. 21. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 1, p. 52; Strabo, Herodotus, and other authors. Juvenal also has this passage:

'Quis necesse Voluit Bhyrnicæ, qualis demens
Egyptum portenta colat? crocodilon adorna.'
Lib. 4, Sat. 15.

Daubuz says, the crocodile was called by the Arabians Pharaok, and was held by the Egyptians as the symbol of all mischief. And therefore Typho being, in their belief, the author of all evils, was supposed to have transformed himself into a crocodile or dragon. So that the principle of evil, or Typho, was, in the symbolical character, represented by a crocodile or dragon, and under this symbol was worshipped. Agreeably whereto, in the Chaldean theology, the principle of evil was called Arimanius, i. e. the crafty serpent.

It is the passage in Ez. 29:3, as well as the history itself, in the book of Exodus, which Milton has probably in view, Par. Lost. b. 12, l. 190:

'Thus with ten wounds,
The riser dragon lamed, at length submits,' &c.

D'Herbelot cites an Eastern poet, who, celebrating the prowess of a most valiant Persian prince, said,

'He was dreadful as a lion in the field,
And not less terrible in the water as a crocodile;'

a comparison which agrees remarkably with that used by Ezekiel, 32:2, already quoted. The phrase used there of 'breaking forth,' may refer to the act of the crocodile when he bursts above the water to seize his prey; or, as Gousselinus supposes, raising the head above the water, for the purpose of breathing more freely — 'ut respiratio se reficiat.'

In Is. 27:1, Leviathan is called 'the straight or rigid serpent,' the crocodile having a remarkably straight, rigid, and inflexible body, so that he cannot easily turn himself in pursuing his prey.

CROWN. In Hebrew, ceter, whence the Greek, akropolis, a diadem.

Diadems are constantly the symbols of an imperial or auto-cratic power, extending itself over all sorts of power, civil and ecclesiastical.

Zridavai, translated crowns, are symbols of an inferior, feudatory, or delegated power; so that there is the same difference between them and diadems as there is between a royal or imperial crown and a coronet; and therefore the crown or coronet is by the Indian Interpreter, c. 247, explained of the second person to the king, or the prime minister of state. So that the crown or coronet is the symbol of judicial power and dominion inferior to the supreme.

And it is also the symbol of victory and reward, it being customary for conquerors to be crowned.

The mitre of the high-priest was called by the ancient Greeks tiara, cideris, and sometimes diadema; they wore a sort of linen turban, commonly white; and such were the diadems of kings, which Ammianus calls Fasciolum candidum, Regis Majestatis insignie. This linen covering of the head, with the plate of gold, on which 'Holiness to the Lord' was inscribed, is called the holy crown. So that a turban, with a gold ornament, in the language of the Scripture, is a crown of gold. Le. 8:9.

Re. 19:12, 'On his head were many crowns,' to show his numerous conquests and large empire.

Among the ancients, the crown was a symbol of dignity and authority — of comeliness and ornament — and sometimes of love. See Lucian, Euripides, and Anacreon, who use it in these various senses.

The Magi used to wear a tiara, as we learn from Pausanias, Eliac, lib. 5, 'But a Magus entering into the temple, and having placed some dry wood upon the fire, covered his head with a tiara, and invoked some deity, I know not whom.' Strabo mentions the like, lib. 15.

That ambassadors wore something of the kind appears from Claudian:

'Misiqne regnum
Fulera Porcum proceres, cum patre sedentem
Hæc quoddam videre domo, postaque tunc
Submisere genus.'

The church is finely compared to a crown by the prophet Isaiah, 62:3,

'And thou shalt be a beautiful crown in the hand of Jehovah;
And a royal diadem in the grasp of thy God.'

CUP is used as a symbol in Scripture in various senses.

It is employed to describe the practices of the false church, in Re. 17:4, 'Having a golden cup in her hand,' denoting the enticing means and specious pretences by which the antichristian church allures people to idolatry, particularly by sensuality, luxury, and affluence. There is an allusion to the philtres, or love potions, which lewd women used to prepare for the purposes of debauchery, and of inflaming the passions of their paramours. The cup is said to be 'full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.' With this agrees the prophecy of Jeremiah, 51:7, where Babylon is called 'a golden cup in the hand of Jehovah;' i. e. she was a splendid instrument of vengeance ordained by God against the neighboring nations; and as all these had suffered by her, all are represented as ready to glory over her, or to rejoice when her turn of suffering came. That a cup is the symbol of idolatry and its rites, appears also from Paul's expression in 1 Co. 10:21, 'Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons.' In the heathen sacrifices, as Macknight observes, the priests, before they poured the wine upon the victim, tasted it themselves; then carried it to the offerers, and to those who came with them, that they also might taste it, as joining in the sacrifice, and receiving benefit from it. Thus Virgil, Æn. 8, 273,

'Quare agite, O Juvencus,' &c.
'For these dejects, and this high virtue shown,
Ye warlike youths, your heads with garlands crown,
Fill him the goblets with a sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god.'
Dryden.

Wine, mixed with bitter ingredients, was usually given to malefactors when they were going to be put to death. And therefore, by a metonymy of the adjunct, the mixed bitter cup of wine is the symbol of torment or death, as in Ps. 75:3,

'In the hand of Jehovah there is a cup, and the wine is bitter;
It is full of a mixed liquor, and he poureth out of it:
Verily the dregs thereof all the ungodly of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.'

But no where is this image of the cup of God's wrath presented with more force and sublimity than in Is. 51:17, &c., where Jerusalem is represented as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her own children, not one of them being able to support or lead her.

Plato has an idea something like this, which Louth refers to in his note.
As the red which happens to men is the effect of God's justice and severity, and the good which happens to them is the effect of his bounty and goodness, therefore, in the sacred writings, the one is represented by a cup of wrath, and the other under the symbol of a cup of salvation, Ps. 116:13, and of drinking of the river of pleasures, Ps. 36:8, at the right hand of God. Ps. 16:11.

So Homer places two vessels at the threshold of Jupiter, one of good, the other of evil; he gives to some a potion mixed of both, to others from the evil vessel only. Il. 24, line 527, &c.

'Two urns by Jove's high throne have our soul,
The source of evil one, and one of good;
From thence the cup of mortal sin is fill'd,
Blossoms to these, to those distresses fill'd:
To most me mingles both. The wretch doth
To taste the bad unmix'd, is cur'd indeed:
Purged by wrongs, by meagre fumes drives,
He wanders, scarcest both of such evil leaves.
The happiest taste not happiness alone,
But find the cordial draught is dashed with care.'

When our Savior asks James and John whether they were able to drink of the cup which he was to drink of, Mat. 26:23, he means, whether they had resolution and patience to undergo the like sufferings and afflictions as his Father had allotted for him. And in the like sense he prays, Mat. 26:39, 'O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.'

The image of a cup as a portion, seems to have been borrowed from the ancient custom of the master of the feast appointing to each of the guests his cup, i. e. his kind and measure of liquor; as in the following passage from the Iliad, b. 4, 961,

'For this, in banquets, when the guests have Remov'd our blood, and rais'd the warmest wine,
Though all the rest with staid rains on bread,
Unmix'd, unmessur'd, are thy goblets crown'd.'

God says to Jeremiah, 25:15, 'Take the cup of the wine of this wrath from my hand, and tender it to all the nations to drink, me whom I shall send thee,' &c., meaning thereby those heavy judgments which he was about to inflict on the objects of his displeasure. And the prophet, who announced them, is considered as acting the part of a cup-bearer, carrying the cup round to those who were appointed to drink of it, the effects of which were to appear in the intoxication, that is, in the terror and desolation that should prevail among them.

It is not to be imagined that the prophet went round in person to all the nations and kings here enumerated, but either that he did so in a vision, or else that he actually did what is figuratively designed; that is, he publicly announced the judgments of God severely against them, as we find in chapters 48 to 51, inclusive, and which the Seventy have introduced in this place.

Re. 14:10, 'The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out, without mixture, into the cup of his indignation.'

It has been already remarked, that it was usual to give malefactors a cup of wine before going to execution; but sometimes a cup was given them, in which some strong poison had been infused, on purpose to cause their death. Such was the well-known mode of despatching Socrates. Grotius thinks the words and out mixture, intimate that the poisonous ingredients were infused in pure, unmixed wine, to take a stronger tincture, and become a more deadly poison.

So in Zech. 12:2,
'Behold I will make Jerusalem
A cup of trembling to all the people round about;
i. e. an inebriating and stupefying portion of the strongest liquors and drugs. Jerusalem shall strike the nations with dread and astonishment.'

On Ha. 2:16, Grotius observes, that verses 15 and 16 contain an allegory. The Chaldeans gave to the neighboring nations the cup of idolatry and deceitful alliance, and in return they received from Jehovah the cup of his fury.

Re. 18:6, 'In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.'

This is agreeable to the Jewish law of retaliation and restitution, which in some cases enjoined double punishment or damages. See Ex. 22:4.

The seven phials filled with the seven last plagues, are properly bowls or cups. That the emblem was not unknown to profane authors, appears from the writings of Plautus and Apollonius, as has been shown by several.

We read in Jer. 16:7, of the 'cup of consolations,' in allusion to the funeral custom of the Jews, which, Sir John Chardin tells us, is still observed by the Oriental Christians, of sending provisions to the house of the deceased, where healths were also drunk to the survivors of the family, wishing that the dead may have been the victims for the sins of the family. The same is practised among the Moors. Of the Jewish method, we read that a Berach, Hieros. fol. 6: 'Ten cups were drunk at the house of the deceased; two before the funeral banquet, — five amidst the banquet, — and three after it was finished. Of these three last, one was intended for thanksgiving, another as an office of kindness, and the third for the consolation of the mourners. That the same custom prevailed among the Romans, is shown by Spencer, De Leg. Heb. b. 4, c. 1.

something similar seems to be hinted at in the opening lines of the Iliad:—

'All Troy then moves to Priam's court again,
A solemn, silent, melancholy train:
Assembled there, from pious toil they rest,
And sadly shared the last sepulchral feast.'

The cup was an emblem of capital punishment, because, among the ancients, it was usual to inflict death, by presenting to the condemned cup of hemlock or other poison, as was the use of Socrates. And hence we hear our ordaining, 'The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?' And hence at expression in the Psalms, 'There is a cup in the hands of the Lord—all the wicked of the earth shall drink of it.'

D.

DARKNESS. As light is the symbol of joy and safety, so, on the contrary, darkness is a symbol of misery and adversity. It is thus used in Jer. 13:16,

'Give ye glory to Jehovah your God,

Before it grows dark,
And before your feet stumble upon the mountains of gloominess.'

Meaning those solitary and gloomy mansions at which when 'the dead' arrive, they say, by a poetical image, be supposed to stumble, because of the darkness, and to fall so as never to rise more. Compare Ps. 44:20. 143:3, b. 18:6.

The prophet Isaiah makes use of much the same images, 59:9,10, where he represents the people as complaining of the wretchedness of their situation:

'We look for light, but behold darkness;
For brightness, but we walk in obscurity.
We gaze for the wall like the blind,
Even as those that are eyesless do we grope;
We stumble at midday as in the dusk,
In desolate places, like the dead.'

See also Ez. 30:18. 34:12. Is. 8:22. 9:1.

Artemidorus, examining the various significations of the air, as to its qualities, says, A gloomy, dark, overclouded air, signifies ill success, or want of power, and sorrow arising hereupon.

Horace has the following simile, Ode v. 4, 40:

'Pulcher fugalis
Ille dies Latio tenebris'

In Am. 4:13, 'That maketh the morning darkness,' there is supposed to be an allusion to the black clouds and smoke attending earthquakes. Des nuages noirs et épais (says a French writer) sont ordinairement les avant-coureurs de ces funestes catastrophes.

By 'a day of darkness,' in Jo. 2:2, the prophet intends to set forth the greatness of the people's distress by the sudden calamity of the locusts.

We find Cicero employing the same figurative language: 'Quid tandem, tum illis rebus tenebris, cœcique nubibus et procelis, cum senatum e gubernaculis dejecisses,' &c. (Pro domo sua.)

The following allegory, under which the fall of Pharaoh is threatened, is an instance of the manner of applying the figure, by which darkness is made to represent calamity, a topic on which the Hebrew writers give the full reins of poetical boldness. Ez. 32:7,8.

I will cover the heavens when I quench thee,
And I will clothe the stars thereof with black;
I will cover the sun with a cloud,
And the moon shall not give her light,
All the shining lights of the heavens will I clothe with black over thee.
And I will set darkness upon thy land,
Said the Lord Jehovah.

Darkness is represented as the accompaniment of idolatrous rites. Ez. 8:12, 'Hast thou seen, O son of man, what the elders of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in his chambers of his imagery?'

Milton refers to this in his Paradise Lost, l. 455.

'By the vision led,
His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah.'

Darkness of the sun, moon, and stars, is an allusion to denote a general darkness or deficiency in the government, as in Is. 13:10. &c. 32:7, above quoted; Jo. 2:10,31.

And the Oneirocritics, in ch. 167, explain the scipus of the sun and moon — of obscurity, affliction, oppression, and the like, according to the subject.

Ep. 5:11, 'The works of darkness.' The apostle calls the heathen mysteries works of darkness, because the impure actions which the initiated performed in them, under the sanction of religious rites, were done in the light time; and, by the secrecy in which they were acted, were acknowledged by the perpetrators to be evil. Macknight.

The term 'outer darkness,' which occurs in Mat. 8:12, and in other passages, is well explained by the learned Du Veil: 'Utitur Christus hac loquendi formula, quia agit hic de regno colorum sub similitudine cœne convivialis, quæ quia de nocte fit, solet copioso tædarum lumine celebrari. Itaque qui in cœnacula sunt, in magno sunt lumine; qui extra, in magnis versantur tenebris.'

The state of the dead is often represented in Scripture under the image of darkness. Thus Jo. 10:21,

'Before I go whence I shall not return,
Even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death,
A land of darkness, as darkness itself,
And of the shadow of death, without any order,
And where the light is as darkness.'

And Jo. 17:13,

'If I wait, the grave is mine house;
I have made my bed in the darkness.'

Heathen writers employ the same image. Thus Lucan, b. vi. v. 712,

'Non in tartarus ille tantum posuimus antro
Aduscatum diu tenebris, modo luce fugatis,
Descendentem animum.'

Whence Callimachus inquires of the kingdom of Pluto, Epigr. 14, τι τὰ νῆρθε; πολὺν σκότος.

'What is there below? Much darkness.'

Darkness is occasionally the emblem of ignorance; and the fitness of the one to represent the other is sufficiently obvious. Is. 9:2,

'The people that walked in darkness
Have seen a great light.'

Is. 60:2,

'Behold, darkness shall cover the earth,
And a thick vapor the nations.'

Mat. 6:23,

'If thy eye which is in thee be darkness,
How great is that darkness!'

See Campbell's note on this passage.

3 Co. 4:6, 'God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts,' &c.

Jn. 3:19,

'Light hath come into the world,
But men have loved darkness rather than light,
Because their deeds were evil.'

Juvenal has something like this, b. ii. v. 239:

'Quicunque malis vitam maculaverit acie,
Ad tenebras pavidas refugit, non lumine claro
Sordida pollute pœtant contagio mentis.'

Darkness is sometimes the emblem of captivity: thus, Is. 47:5,

'Sit thou in silence, go into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans;
For thou shalt no longer be called the lady of the kingdoms.'

La. 3:6,

'In the midst of darkness hath he caused me to dwell,
As those that have been dead of long time.'

Cicero uses similar expressions, Orat. 10, in Verr.: 'Cum esset in carcere, in tenebris, in squalore, in aordibus tyrannicis interdictis tuis, pari exacta estate.'

It is possible that there may be a reference to the phrase 'outer darkness' in that passage, Re. 22:15, where it is said, 'Without,' i. e. beyond the new or mystical Jerusalem, 'there are dogs, poisoners, whoremongers, murderers, and idolaters.' But it is more likely that allusion is there made to the outer court of the Gentiles. See under Doc.

DARNEL. The darnel or lolium, improperly called tares in our version, was anciently the symbol of corrupt manners, as Pierus mentions in his Treatise de Hieroglyphicis, p. 405, 'Morum enim corrupturum id omnino indicium est,' &c. 'Envious men,' says Plutarch, 'are as useless to a state, as darnel is to wheat.' And the epithet given to this plant by Virgil is well known:

'Grandis sepe quibus mandavimus hordæ sulcis,
Infelix lolium, et steriles dominatur avenæ.'

DAY, as the time of light, and as opposed to darkness or night, is the symbol of a time of prosperity.

A day is often used, both in sacred and profane writings, for an indeterminate portion of time. The day of temptation in the wilderness was forty years. The day of the Lord is the time of judgment. And Paul, speaking of men's judgment, 1 Co. 4:3, calls it ἀνθρῳπινὴ ἡμέρα, or the day of man, in opposition, as it should seem, to the day of the Lord. So 'Opinionum commenta delet dies,' as in Cicero. And it has been observed, that a good rule to judge what portion of time may be designed by such indeterminate expressions, is to consider what is necessary or proportional to the season spoken of.

'The day of the Lord.' This expression is used in the Scriptures to signify a time of calamity and distress, when God pours out his judgments upon any nation or people as a punishment for their sins. See Jo. 2:11. Is. 2:12, &c.

In the New Testament it generally signifies the day of judgment, because God will then execute his final judgment upon all impenitent and ungodly sinners. See Ju. 5:6, Re. 6:17.

In Jo. 1:15, it signifies the time during which God suffered the locusts to infest the country of Judea; which produced the most dreadful scarcity, and turned the land into a barren wilderness. These locusts were accounted the most dreadful plague; inasmuch that those who were instrumental to deliver any nation from them, were repaid with divine honors. Thus the Cœtians named Hercules Coronipus, from coronops, a locust, and worshipped him under that character, because he drove away the locusts from them. Chandler on Joel.

See more on DAY, under TIME.
'That day,' means that great day of the Lord, the day of judgment, as before mentioned. See Mat. 7:22. Lu. 10:12. 2 Th. 1:10. 2 Ti. 1:18. 4:8. But in He. 10:25, the phrase seems to import the day of the destruction of the Jewish state.

DEATH is the destruction of the subject spoken of, according to its nature, even though it have no natural life; that is, in such a manner that it cannot any more act as such.

So in Ro. 7:8, 'Without the law sin is dead;' i. e. without the law sin does not exert its power. And on the other hand, as it is said there, v. 9, 'Sin revived and I died;' i. e. sin got strength to act, and I lost my power to resist: I was not the same man as before; sin destroyed my power.

So of a nation, Am. 2:2, 'Moab shall die with tumult,'—the meaning being, that the king and government thereof shall lose their power, and the nation be brought into subjection and slavery.

So Cicero, when banished, called himself dead, an image, and the like, lib. i. ep. 3. ad. 2, Pr.

And so the ancient philosophers called vicious persons, unable, through ill habits, to exert any virtuous act, dead men. Simplicius in Epict. p. 2.

On the contrary, to live is to be in a power to act,—acting and living being, says Artemidorus, l. 4. c. 42, analogous to each other.

And so in He. 4:21, ζῶν, quick or alive, signifies active or powerful—the word εὐτυχής, powerful, being joined to it, to show the meaning.

Death is finely personified in Jer. 9:21,

'For death hath climbed up through our windows;
It hath entered into our palaces;
It hath cut off the children from the street,
And destroyed the young men from the broad places.'

And in La. 1:20,

'Abroad a sword destroyeth, at home as it were death;' meaning the pestilence—death, as it were, acting in propria persona; and not by the instrumentality of another, as when a person is slain by the sword. So our great poet in his description of a lazar-house:—

'Despair
Tended the sick, busied from couch to couch;
And over them triumphant, Death his dart
Shook, but delayed to strike.' Par. Lost, b. iii. 689.

As the word death, when applied to the animal nature, properly signifies a dissolution or failure of all its powers and functions; so, when applied to the spiritual nature, or souls of men, as Parkhurst observes, it denotes a correspondent disorder therein, a being cut off from a communication with the divine light and spirit, a being spiritually dead, dead in trespasses and sins. Compare Ep. 2:1,3. Col. 2:13. Ro. 8:6. Ep. 5:14. Jn. 5:24,25. Ju. 12.

The 'second death,' Re. 2:11, is so called in respect to the natural or temporal, as coming after it, and implies everlasting punishment. Re. 2:18.

By a Hebraism, the plague or pestilence is sometimes called death. See Grotius on Mat. 24:7; also Jer. 9:21, before quoted, and 18:21, and 15:2. It occurs also in Re. 6:8, with which compare Ez. 14:21. Re. 2:23. 18:8.

'Shadow of death.' This image (says Blayney on Jer. 2:6), was undoubtedly borrowed from those dusky caverns and holes among the rocks, which the Jews ordinarily chose for their burying-places, where Death seemed to hover continually, casting over them his broad shadows. Sometimes, indeed, I believe nothing more is intended by it than to denote a dreariness and gloom like that which reigns in those dismal mansions. But in other places it respects the perils and dangers of the situation. Thus, Ps. 22:4, 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.' And again, Ps. 64:19. But in Jer. 2:6, over and above the foregoing allusions, 'the land of the shadow of death' seems to intend the grave itself, which the wilderness actually proved to all the individuals of the children of Israel that entered into it, Caleb and Joshua only excepted, whose lives were preserved by a special providence. See also

Jer. 13:16, and Is. 50:9,10, where the same images are employed.

DESERT, or WILDERNESS. A place remote from the society and commerce of men; the symbol of temptation, solitude, persecution, desolation, and the like.

Thus in Is. 27:10,

'The strongly-fortified city shall be desolate,
A habitation forsaken, and deserted as a wilderness.'

And in 33:9

'The loud mourneth, it languisheth;
Lebanon is put to shame, it withereth;
Sharon is become like a desert;
Bashan and Carmel are stripped of their beauty.'

And thus Æneas, in Virgil, to show the misery of his condition, mentions his wandering unknown and needy in a wilderness, Æn. b. 1, v. 308.

'Ipse ignotus, egeus, lilym deserta peragro.'

But a wilderness may also be a symbol of good, when it denotes a hiding-place from enemies, as David often found it; and as the Israelites did in the persecution of Antiochus, when the Gentiles had profaned the sanctuary.

Deserts are sometimes emblematic of spiritual things, as in Is. 41:19,

'In the wilderness I will give the cedar,
The acacia, the myrtle, and the tree producing oil,
I will plant the fir-tree in the desert,
The pine and the box together.'

So in 32:15,

'Till the Spirit from on high be poured out upon us,
And the wilderness become a fruitful field,
And the fruitful field be esteemed a forest,
And judgment shall dwell in the wilderness,
And in the fruitful field shall reside righteousness;'

meaning nations in which there was no knowledge of God, or of divine truth, shall be enlightened and made to produce fruit unto holiness.

Deserts are generally pathless. In reference to this Isaiah says, 35:8,

'And a highway shall be there,
And it shall be called the way of holiness:
No unclean person shall pass through it,
But He Himself shall be with them, walking in the way.'

He Himself, i. e. God, who shall dwell among them, and set them an example that they should follow his steps.

'The desert is the symbol of the Jewish church and people; Is. 40:3,

'A voice crieth in the wilderness.'

The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her King. See the whole of Lowth's note in loco. See also Ez. 47:8.

The desert seems also to be the symbol of the antichristian empire. Re. 17:3.

It was in the wilderness that John saw the vision of the woman clothed in purple; and since this woman denotes mystic Babylon, the wilderness may be understood to be the figure of her power.

It is of the conversion of the Gentiles the prophet speaks, when he says, Is. 35:1,

'The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them,
The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.'

The solitude of the desert is a subject often referred to: thus Jb. 38:26,

'To cause it to run on the earth, where no man is,
On the wilderness, wherein there is no man.'

Jer. 9:2,

'Oh that I had in the wilderness a traveller's lodge,
That I might leave my people, and go from them!'

By a traveller's lodge, meaning some cave or hut, which some one before him may have erected for a temporary shelter.

Horace describes the desert, as 'terram domibus negatam,' and elsewhere,

'Sive facturus (litter) per inopitabilem Caucasum;'

and Propertius, b. 1, el. 10,

'Hæc certe deserta loca et tacitura querenti,
Et vacuum sephyræ pascitur auras nemus,
Hic licet oculis proferre impune dolorem;'

that is, without any one's presence or knowledge.

The desert is the abode of evil spirits, or, at least, their occasional resort. See Mat. 12:43. Lu. 11:24. The heathen also held this opinion; witness Avian, fab. 23,

'Hunc cernitur custos ferunt miseratus in antro Excreptum stratus continuis suis;'

and Virgil, Æn. 6, v. 27,

'Tum vero innumerus faunos fœnasque videres
Ludere,' &c.

The Shedim or demons of Scripture appear to have been the satyrs and fauns of the Gentiles, whom the Israelites idolatrously served. De. 32:17. Ps. 106:37. Shedim being derived from shed, to lay waste or desolate. See Is. 34:14, and Jer. 50:38,39. And Maimonides, speaking of the Zabani, says, 'They relate in their books, that on account of the wrath of Mars, desert and desolate places are without water and trees, and that horrid demons inhabit those places.'

Mat. 13:43 is thus paraphrased by a foreign writer: 'The devil, being expelled from the Jews, passed over to the Gentiles; but when, by the light of the gospel, he was driven from thence, and found no resting-place, he returned to the blinded Jews, and took possession of them more than before.'

The desert is described as a place of great peril through robbers and assassins. See Is. 4:19,

'They laid wait for us in the wilderness.'

Ac. 21:38,

'Art not thou that Egyptian, who hastened out into the wilderness
Four thousand men that were murderers?'

See Josephus, Antiq. b. xx. 6. And Paul, 2 Co. 11:26, mentions 'perils in the wilderness.'

To the primitive Christians, the world was every where a wilderness of this kind; hence they are called pilgrims and strangers, who had no abiding city. And by the heathen they were often classed with and treated as robbers, according to the inscription which Scalliger cites. Neroni Claudio Cesari Aug. Pontif. Max. ob provinciam latronibus et his qui novum generi humano superstitionem inculcant purgatum; i. e. to Nero Claudius Cesar Augustus, high-priest, on account of his having cleared the province of robbers, and of those who taught mankind a new superstition.

DEW. The moisture which, arising from the earth, refreshes, invigorates, and promotes the growth of vegetables, and beautifies them with its drops, as with so many shining pearls. But when the sun grows hot, it is quickly exhaled, and vanishes away. During the months of May, June, July, and August, in Palestine, not a single cloud is to be seen; but, during the night, the earth is moistened by a copious dew, which, in the sacred volume, is frequently made a symbol of the divine goodness. Thus, Ge. 27:28,

'Therefore may God give thee of the dew of heaven,
And the fatness of the earth,
And plenty of corn and wine.'

And Ge. 49:25, where the 'blessing from above' is equivalent with dew.

See also De. 33:13. Jb. 29:19. Mi. 5:7.

In Arabia Petrea, the dews are so heavy as to wet to the skin those who are exposed to them; but as soon as the sun arises, and the atmosphere becomes a little warmed, the mists are quickly dispersed, and the abundant moisture, which the dews had communicated to the sands, is entirely evaporated. What a forcible description is this of the transiently good impressions felt by many, to which the prophet alludes in Ho. 6:4,

'What shall I do unto thee, O Ephraim?
What shall I do unto thee, O Judah?
For your goodness is as a morning cloud,
And as early dew which passeth away.'

Allusion is also made to the refreshing nature of the dews of Palestine.

Ho. 14:5,

'I will be as the dew to Israel,
He shall blossom as the lily,
And he shall strike his roots as Lebanon.'

Dew is the symbol of the blessed effects of divine teaching, which is equally silent, gentle, and refreshing. Thus, De. 32:2,

'My doctrine shall drop as the rain,
My speech shall distil as the dew;
(Like showers upon the tender herb,
Like a copious dew on the grass;'

i. e. my doctrine shall have the same effect upon your hearts, as the dew has upon the earth; it shall make them soft, pliable, and fruitful. In 2 Pe. 2:17, false teachers are called wells without water.

And God, speaking by Isaiah of his vineyard, says, Is. 27:3,

'It is I Jehovah that keep it:
I will water it every moment,
I will take care of it by night,
And by day I will keep guard over it.'

In Am. 7:16, to 'drop the word' is to prophesy; the metaphor being taken from the symbol of dew; because prophecy is the gracious effect of God's favor.

Homér, who appears to have been a careful observer of nature, thus describes the early morn, as in Pope's version:

'Aurora now, fair daughter of the dawn,
Sprinkled with rosy steps the dewy lawn.'

And in Ilind, b. 23, l. 597, he compares the exultation of joy in a man's mind to the morning dew reviving the corn.

'Joy swells his soul; as when the vernal grain
Lifts the green ear above the springing plain;
The fields their vegetable life renew,
And laugh and glitter with the morning dew.'

The oneirocritics explain the symbol of rain, or dew, of all manner of good things.

As the bestowing of dew was a blessing, so the withholding of it was a curse. Hence David thus speaks of the scene of Saul and Jonathan's death, 2 S. 1:21—

'Ye mountains of Gilead,
On you he neither drew nor rain,
Nor fields affording oblation.'

i. e. let your fields henceforth produce nothing worthy to be offered to the Lord.

Dew, as consisting of innumerable drops, is sometimes the symbol of multitude. Thus, Ps. 110:3,

'More than the dew from the womb of the morning
Shall be the dew of thy progeny;'

meaning, that converts to the gospel of Christ should at some future period be very numerous. But it is right to notice, that Durell gives the passage a different sense. Thus:—

'I have brought thee forth out of the womb,
Before the morning brought on the dew.'

i. e. God, addressing the Messiah, adverts to the existence of the latter long before the creation of any being.

Having examined the different versions minutely, with a view to ascertain the genuine meaning of this difficult passage, the following is the result, from which it appears the renderings similar to that of Dr. Durell preponderate; but they can scarcely be said to be warranted by the original.

Literal version of the Hebrew:

'More than the womb of the dew,
The dew of thy progeny.'

The Septuagint:

'In the splendours of thy holiness from the womb,
Before the morning-star I begot thee.'

Vulgate: The same as the Septuagint.

Aquila:

'Thou hast the dew of thy youth
From the womb, from the morning.'

Symmachus:

'Thy youth is as the morning dew.'

Booths:

'Thou hast shone like the morning; from thy very birth,
Thy youth has been covered with dew.'

Mudge:

'Thy youth (meaning young men) shall be ready as the hand,
As dew from the womb of the morning.'

Parkhurst:

'More than (the dew from) the womb of the dew,
(Shall be) the dew of thy progeny.'

So also Cocceus and Bishop Lowth.

Pye Smith:

'From the womb of the morning,
Thine shall be the dew of thy youth.'

Kennicott (on the authority of the Syriac and Arabic):

'In majesty and holiness from the womb;
Before the morning-star, I have begotten thee.'

Le Cene:

'You have shone like the dawn from your birth;
Your infancy has been covered with dew.'

When I said above, that renderings similar to Durell's preponderate, I meant not in point of number, but in point of value; since the Septuagint, the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, are of more importance than modern versions. But there seems to be something wanting in the Hebrew original, which it is now very difficult to supply. At present it conveys no meaning whatever.

In another place, dew is made the symbol of brotherly love and harmony; for though the drops are many, they sometimes run together and coalesce, as quicksilver is seen to do upon a smooth surface. Thus, Ps. 133:3,

'As the dew of Hermon,
That descended upon the mountains of Zion;'

a passage which has greatly embarrassed critics, to account how the dew of Hermon could fall upon the mountains of Zion, in Jerusalem, at the distance of upwards of sixty miles.

And hence our translators try to overcome the difficulty by inserting the words 'and so the dew';—and Durell renders it, 'Upon the dew hills,' for so he affirms the word Zion is used in Is. 25:5, and 32:2. Durell imagines that David, seeing the two summits at a distance, had joined them together in his description, without reference to the interval between them. But the best interpretation seems to be that of Dr. Stukeley, in his history of Mount Zion, ch. 14, who corrects Zion into Sion, as being a mistake of some transcriber; and this is justified by reference to the Sidonian call Sion, says, 'which Hermon the Sidonians call Sion.' And this mode of parallel is very common in the poetical parts of Scripture.

The silent manner in which a man's true self overtakes his enemy by stealth, is beautifully likened to the falling of the dew by Hermon, in 2 S. 17:12;—'So shall we come upon him as the dew which he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground.'

The comparison of God's visitation of his people to dew is remarkable in several passages. Thus, Is. 26:19,—

'They shall build here; my dream, they shall see:
A habitation and dew, ye that dwell in the dust!
For thy dew is as the dew of the dew.'

at the earth shall cast forth, as an abortion, the deceased tyrants.
Leath's Version.

The prophet here speaks of the captivity of Babylon as of a state of death, and the deliverance of God's people from their depression is plainly by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead, similar to what we find in Ez. ch. 37.

The residue of Jacob is beautifully compared dew in Mi. 5:7—

'As the dew from Jehovah,
As the showers upon the grass,
Which tarrieth not for man,
Neither waiteth for the sons of men.'

See Jews, observes Newcome, contributed to read the knowledge of the one true God during their captivity. See Da. 2:47. 3:29. 4:34. b. The gospel was preached by them when a Messiah appeared, and it shall again be operated by their future glorious restoration. 11:12, 15.

See a similar passage in Zch. 8:12—

'For the seed shall be prosperous;
The vine shall yield its fruit,
And the ground shall yield its increase,
And he heavens shall yield their dew,
And I will cause the residue of this people
To possess all these things.'

DOG. The symbol of uncleanness, immodesties, apostasy; also of the Gentile tribes generally, whom the Jews despised, as being attitudinal of the true knowledge, worship, and obedience of God; as living in impurity, and living without the pale of the covenant.

The dog was declared to be unclean by the word of Moses, and the term 'flea dog' among the Jews was expressive of the utmost contempt. See 1 S. 24:14. 2 S. 9:8.

In De. 23:18, dog seems to be used for a person guilty of unnatural crimes. Such persons are called 'the abominable' in Re. 21:8, and their doom is there pronounced. Such as resemble them are excluded from the kingdom of heaven, Re. 22:15, where there is an allusion to the outer court of the Gentiles, who were not admitted into the holy place;—without are dogs.

It has been objected to this view of De. 23:18, but legislators are not wont to use metaphorical expressions in the wording of their precepts—which is true; but the price of a dog being classed along with the hire of a prostitute, as being an odious offering at the altar of God, leads to prefer the figurative to the literal sense. There are great names on both sides of names can determine any question. For the figurative, Le Clerc, Rosenmüller, Houbigant, Michælis; for the literal, Bochart, Spenser, Kenius, Geddes, Dathe. Herbelot quotes a passage from a Persian poet, in which Sodomites are compared to dogs. The Turks reckon a dog an unclean and filthy creature, and therefore drive him from their houses. Dogs here belong to no particular owners, but live in the offals which are thrown abroad in the streets.

Solomon and Peter compare apostates to dogs returning to their vomit. See Pr. 26:11. Ps. 22:2.

David, personating Christ, compares his enemies to dogs, as slandering and persecuting him: Ps. 22:16.

And Paul calls the false apostles dogs, on account of their impudence and love of gain: 'bél. 32, 'beware of dogs.' 'Cave canem,' meaning rabidness, was a proverb among the ancients.

Virgil uses the term 'obscenique canes,' in Jour. b. 1, v. 470.

But, in Is. 56:10, the dog is used as the symbol of diligence and watchfulness; for, vile as any creatures may be in their habits as animals, there are none that are not to be considered as possessing some good qualities, as signs of God's formation, and intended severally for wise purposes. As the barking of dogs is useful to give notice to man of the approach of strangers, so those watchmen mentioned by the prophet, meaning the ministers of religion of that day, when they ceased to warn the people, are compared to dogs who are dumb, and who cannot or do not bark. Consequently who have lost their most useful property.

'When our Lord says, in Mat. 15:26, 'It is not proper to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs,' by the children he means the Jews, by the dogs the Gentiles. In the technical writings, the question is put, 'What does a dog mean?' and the answer given is, 'One who is uncircumcised.'

The dog and the sow are mentioned together in Isaiah, 66:3; by Christ, in Mat. 7:6; and by Paul, 2 Pe. 2:22, as being alike impure and execrable. Horace also classes them together—

'Vilissimæ canis immunda, vel amica luto mixta.'

DOOR is that which closes the light.

SYMBOL DICT.

The opening of any thing is said, when it may act suitably to its quality.

The shutting of any thing is the stopping of its use.

Therefore Paul, in 1 Co. 16:9. 2 Co. 2:12. Col. 4:3, uses the symbol of a door opened, to signify the free exercise and propagation of the gospel.

Thus in Pindar, Olymp. Od. 6, 'to open the gates of songs,' is to begin to sing freely. And in Euripides, Hippol. v. 56, 'the gates of hell opened,' signify death ready to seize upon a man, and to exert its power.

And thus in the Ottoman empire, according to Sir Paul Rycaut, when a call or new levy of Janizaries is made, it is said to be the opening of a door for Janizaries; an expression very much like that in Ac. 14:27, of God's having 'opened a door of faith for the Gentiles.' In 100, our Lord applies the term to himself—'I am the door,' on which see Campbell's note on Ju. 10:8.

In Hos. 2:15, the valley of Achor is called 'a door of hope,' because there, immediately after the execution of Achan, God said to Joshua, 'Fear not, neither be dismayed,' 8:1, and promised to support him against Ai, her king, and people. And from that time Joshua drove on his conquests with uninterrupted success. See Horsley on the passage.

DOVE. The symbol of purity and innocence.

Jesus recommends to his disciples the caution of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, Mat. 10:16. It has been justly observed, that He does not recommend these qualities separately, but conjointly, that the one may supply what is lacking in the other, or correct what is lacking of the other; for prudence or caution separately may degenerate into mischievous cunning, and simplicity into silliness. Our poet Cowper has well expressed it:

'That thou must injure no one, dove-like be;
And serpent-like, that none may injure thee.'

And Paul has given the same advice in another form, Ro. 16:19, 'I wish you indeed to be wise in that which is good, and pure in respect to evil.'

So Martial, b. 10, Epigr. 47,

'Prudens simplicitas, parca amicitia,
Sic ut columba.'

The kings of Assyria are said to have used the dove as an emblem. See Ramirez de Prado, who says they had it painted on their standards, banners, and public edifices, as the ensign of their empire. Hence we find in Hos. 11:11, in allusion to the return of the ten tribes,

'They shall habitate as a bird from Egypt,
And as a dove from the land of Assyria.'

And in 7:11,

'Ephraim is as a simple dove without knowledge;
Upon Egypt they call; to Assyria they resort.'

Semiramis is said by Diodorus Siculus, b. 3, c. 4, to have had her name in the Syriac language semir semir semir from the dove.

From the title of Ps. 56, which is addressed 'to the dove of the distant groves,' and seems to have been composed by David when flying from Saul, or some similar enemy, as from a hawk, we may conjecture that the dove was an emblem also of the Israelitish kings, especially as we learn from some of the Jewish writers, quoted by Lightfoot, v. ii., 'That when Solomon sat on his throne, there was appended to it a sceptre, on whose top was a dove, and a golden crown in the mouth of the dove.' Probably the emblem was borrowed from the history of Noah and his dove with the olive of peace, and might be intended to denote a pacific reign.

That the dove is a very timid bird, is well known, and is in part alluded to in Hos. 11:11, and Ez. 7:16, where the Vulgate renders the Hebrew by 'omnes trepidi,' all of them trembling. The profane writers notice this quality. Thus Ovid, as quoted by Parkhurst:

'Non diti I fœc, non diti I fœc,
As flies the Parthian dove with trembling wing,
And as the falcon rapidly pursues.'

And Homer, Il. 22, line 139, &c.

'Thus at the partridge does a falcon flies,
(The swiftest race of the liquid shivers.)
Just when he holds or thinks he holds his prey,
Obliquely wheeling through the aerial way;
With open beak and shrilling cries he springs,
And aims his claws, and shoots upon his wings.'

So Virgil, Æn. 11, line 791, &c.

'Not with more ease the falcon, from above,
Shoots, seizes, grips, and rends the trembling dove;
All stained with blood the brazenous feathers fly,
And the loose plumage comes fluttering down the sky.'

The dove is also the symbol of rest. It was a bird of this kind that brought the tidings to Noah of the retiring of the waters, Ge. 8:11.

Propertius has a similar notice, b. 2—

'Dux erat ignota mitem columba mari, Illa meo tacito non equum desit oculis;'

i. e. a dove was sent forth as a guide in the unknown seas, and she was never absent from my eyes.

Apollodorus also says, 'In the Argonautic expedition, a dove was sent out from the ship among the rocks called Symplegades, in order to determine, by her fate, whether they might be safely passed.' Lib. 1, fol. 32.

The Psalmist says, Ps. 55:6,

'O that I had wings like a dove.'

Seneca, in his Agamemnon, has a similar expression:

'Que lacrymâs nostras questus
Reddet? Advenit colus pennas
Utinam misere mille data darent!'

The cooing of the dove, when solitary, is often alluded to in Scripture, as in Is. 38:14. 50:11. Na. 2:7.

That the dove is a proper emblem of the Holy Spirit, is generally admitted, it being in that form, scilicet, that the Spirit descended on Christ at his baptism, Mat. 3:16. Some have thought that there is an allusion to this emblem in Ge. 1:2, 'And the Spirit of God brooded (like a bird or dove) over the waters.' The olive of peace brought back by the dove of Noah, has also led to a supposed prefiguration of the same kind. It is to Noah's dove, no doubt, that Plutarch refers, in his treatise on the instinct or craft of animals: 'The mythologists tell us, that the dove which Deucalion sent out of his ark, when she returned to him again, was a sure sign that the storm had not ceased,—but of serene weather, when she flew quiet away.'

'The Holy Ghost,' says Archbishop Leighton, 'descended upon the apostles in the shape of fire. There was something to be purged in them; they are to be quickened and enabled by it for their calling.' But in Him, as a dove, there was no need of cleansing or purging out any thing. That was a symbol of the spotless purity of his nature, and of the fulness of the Spirit dwelling in Him. Is. 60:8.

'Who are those that fly as a cloud,
And as doves to their windows?'

where the Chaldee renders, 'as doves who return to their dove-cots.' Pliny, in his Natural History, remarks, 'Solent columbe imprimis ad notas nidus et columbaria, quumlibet in remota loca transverte, pernici volatu remeare.' 'Wherefore a dove was often sent forth as a sign and omen of future return, when the emperors went to war, as the scholiast on Apollon. b. 2, Argon., informs us. And Ovid has this expression:

'Aspicit roscant ad candida testâ columba.'

But But. Lowth translates the text in Isaiah thus:

'And as doves upon the wing;'

for which he assigns his reasons. See his note on the place.

The dove was ordained as an offering under the Old Testament, Le. 12:5, 8. It was worshipped among the Assyrians and Samaritans. See Lucian de Deo Syro, p. 795—'Of birds, the dove appears to be the most sacred, and they account it unlawful even to touch it.' And Hyginus says, 'On this account the Syrians do not eat fishes and doves, which they reckoned among the number of their gods.' That doves were much used among the Jewish sacrificers, appears from Mat. 23:12—'the seats of them that sold doves.' See also Mk. 11:15. Jn. 2:14, 16. That they were offered among the Gentile sacrifices, is plain from ancient authors. Thus Ovid, Fasti, b. 1,

'Ergo sepe suo conjux abducta marito
Urunt in calidâ alba columba foca.'

And Propertius, b. 4, Eleg. 5, in fine.

The dove was worshipped among the Assyrians, as some think, in honor of Semiramis; but others suppose, as an emblem of the air; and hence Hesychius considers it to be the hieroglyphic of a person of exalted mind, and who addicts himself to divine contemplations. Virgil says,

'Redit iter liquidum, celeres neque commovet alas.'

And Tibullus,

'Quid referam ut volitet crebras intacta per urbes Alba Palestinæ assensu Columba Syro?'

The dove was viewed as the emblem of meekness and simplicity; hence, when David was affected with a desire to fly, he wished for the wings, not of the eagle or the hawk, though stronger and more impetuous, but of the dove, for then he should flee away, and be at rest.

It was also considered to be the harbinger of happier times; and in that respect the symbol of future felicity, when the season of divine grace shall have passed away, and men shall enjoy rest in the favor of God, as Noah's dove was the messenger of the cessation of the deluge, and the return of serene skies and subduing waters.

DRUNK. Drunkenness is sometimes the symbol of folly, and of the madness of sinners, who, making no use of their reason, involve themselves in all sorts of crimes.

So Philo explains it.

And so it is taken in Is. 28:1,3, and by Artemidorus, in b. 3, c. 62.

And then, as punishment is the consequence of sin, so drunkenness, in the prophets, is taken for that stupidity which arises from God's judgments; when the sinner is under the consternation of his misery, as one astonished, staggering, and not knowing what to do,—and is therefore the symbol of a very miserable state.

Thus in Jb. 12:25,

'They creep in the dark without light,
And he maketh them to stagger like a drunken man.'

In Is. 29:9,

'They are drunken, but not with wine;
They stagger, but not with strong drink.'

See also Is. 51:21,22, and Lowth's note on Is. 1:29.

Jer. 13:13,14,

I will fill all the inhabitants of this land,
And the kings that sit in David's seat on his thrones,
And the priests and the prophets,
And all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness;
And I will dash them one against another,
And the fathers and the children together, saith Jehovah.'

Here the prophet is directed to deal plainly with them, and to tell them that the wine he meant was not such as would exhilarate, but such as would intoxicate; being no other than what would be poured out of the wine-cup of God's fury to the subversion of all ranks and orders of men amongst them. Compare 25:15-29, and Is. 3:15.

Aristotle says the drunken are doubly punished. Eth. b. 3, c. 5. Sometimes idolatry is set forth under the symbol of drunkenness, as being attended therewith. See Jer. 5:17.

And sometimes drunkenness is used in a good sense, for being replenished or satisfied with good things, as in Jer. 31:14, according to the original.

And so the Oneirocritics sometimes, as in C. 111, 112, explain it of the acquisition of riches. See under COR and WINE.

Hos. 7:5,

'On the feast-day of our king, when the princes began to be with wine,
He stretched out his hand with the scorner.'

The following is the comment of Tarnovius on this passage:—'Tum morbo afflictiis nequos principes calce ex vino, vaporibus calidis caput occupantibus, unde cephalalgia, qui morbus ebrietatis comitatur, quin etiam febris ardensque contrahunt potiores ex nimio vino, quo incalescent.'

Is. 5:11,

'Woe to them who rise early in the morning, to follow strong drink;
Who sit late in the evening, that wine may inflame them.'

Comp. Am. 6:3-6.

DUST. The symbol of rejection.

Mat. 10:14, 'Shake off the dust from your feet,' i. e. says Origen, 'Show them that the very dust which you have collected in a journey undertaken on their account, shall be a witness against them in the day of judgment, because they were unwilling to receive you, or to hear your discourses.'

That the apostles literally observed this injunction of their Master appears from Ac. 13:51, in the case of Antioch in Pisidia.

'Men would not,' says Baxter, 'triumph in their own calamity, when they have expelled their faithful teachers, (the dust of whose feet, the sweat of their brows, the tears of their eyes, and the fervent prayers and groans of their hearts, must witness against them,) if they know themselves.'

It was maintained by the scribes, that the very dust of a heathen country polluted their land, and therefore ought not to be brought into it. Our Lord here, adopting their language, requires his disciples, by this action, to signify that those Jewish cities which rejected their doctrine, deserved a regard no way superior to that which they themselves showed to the cities of pagans. See Campbell's note in loc.

When the Jews, Ac. 22:23, in the height of their rage, threw dust into the air, it showed that these outrageous people would have reduced the apostle to powder, if they durst. Comp. 2 S. 16:13; and see Harmer, b. 4, p. 202.

Dust is the symbol of a low condition.

Is. 2:8,

'(God raiseth up the poor out of the dust,
To set them among princes.'

Nu. 3:18, 'Thy nomies shall dwell in the dust.'

But the proper rendering here seems to be, dwell in sloth.

'Quiescent, decumbunt, dormiunt.'

See Newcome's note.

1 K. 15:2, 'I raised thee out of the dust,' &c. Is. 47:1, 'Descend and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon.'

Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. Jeremiah has the same image in La. 2:8,

'The elders of the daughter of Zion sit on the ground;
They are silent;
They have cast up dust on their heads;
They have girded themselves with sackcloth;
The virgins of Jerusalem have bowed down their heads to the ground.'

Judea is represented in this posture on ancient coins. See Addison on Metals.

The Persians have a proverb, when they would express the lowest humility, 'I am the dust of your feet.'

Dust is the symbol of human frailty and mortality.

Ge. 3:19, 'Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return.'

Jb. 7:21, 'For now shall I sleep in the dust.'

Ps. 92:15, 'Thou hast brought me to the dust of death.'

Rightly, therefore, does the Psalmist observe, Ps. 103:14,

'He knoweth our frame,
He remembereth that we are dust.'

Comp. Ec. 3:20, Jb. 10:9, Sirach 17:31.

Hence also we find profane writers using such expressions: thus Horace, b. 4, Od. 7,

'Pulvis et umbra sumus.
Quis est enim adjiciet bodiæ crastina summus
Tempora Di superi?'

And Phocylides, 'For we have a body formed from the earth, and are all resolved into it again. We are dust, advig iapis.'

Dust is the symbol of sorrow and mourning. The messenger who announced Saul's death had dust upon his head. 2 S. 1:2.

The friends of Job had the same tokens, Jb. 2:12, and the elders of Israel, Jos. 7:6. See many other passages.

The same custom obtained among the heathen, as in Homer's Odyssey, 24, v. 315,

'Deep from his soul he sighed, and, sorrowing, spread
A cloud of ashes on his hoary head.'

And Catullus,

'Primum multas exprobranti mente querelas,
Caesidem terra æque infuso pulvere turpans.'

And Statius, Theb. b. 3,

'Caesidem impexant dira tellure volantes.'

Dust is used to denote multitude: thus, Ge. 13:16, 'I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth.' Nu. 23:10, 'Who can count the dust of Jacob?' Ps. 78:27, 'He rained flesh also upon them as dust.'

DWELL. To dwell over—to give rest and protection. See Nu. 9:18,22, Is. 4:6, 18:4, 25:4, 30:2, Isa. 4:12.

And the Indian Interpreter, c. 202.

To dwell among, Re. 7:15, 21:3, signifies also protection, but in a more remarkable manner; the foregoing expression signifying protection, by any instrument that effects it; but this, protection by the familiar converse and perpetual presence of the worker.

Ep. 3:17, 'That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith.' Paul here compares the minds of the Ephesian Christians to a temple, in allusion to the celebrated temple of Diana at Ephesus, which had an image of her, fabulously reported to have fallen from heaven, constantly dwelling in it. He prays that they might possess a more substantial blessing, viz. 'That Christ might dwell in them, not personally, but by faith,' i. e. by the principles of his religion, heartily and firmly believed by them. See Chandler's excellent note on the passage.

The word of Christ is said to dwell in a person richly in all wisdom, Col. 3:16, when, as Cruden well observes, it is diligently studied, firmly believed, and carefully practised.

EAGLE, the well-known ensign of the Roman empire, is usually the symbol of a king or kingdom.

In Æschylus, Xerxes is represented under the symbol of an eagle, and, in like manner, Agamemnon. The same poet calls the eagle the king of birds. And so did the Egyptians, who also represented a king, that seldom appeared in public, by an eagle. And in the Æsopica, the eagle was always the symbol of the supreme power. Livy, Hist. b. 1; Appian, de Bell. Civ. b. 1; Plutarch in vita Marii, p. 141.

The wings of an eagle are the symbols of protection and care. Thus in Ex. 19:4, God says to the Israelites, after he had delivered them from Pharaoh, and caused them to pass safely into the wilderness, 'Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you to myself,' which is further enlarged upon in De. 32:11,12:

'As an eagle stretch up her nest,
Fluttereth over her young,
Spreading abroad her wings,
Taket them, beareth them on her wings;

So Jehovah alone did lead him,
And there was no strange god with him.'

Sometimes they are put as the symbols of exaltation. And thus, in Is. 40:31, 'To mount up with wings as eagles,' is to be highly exalted.

The interpretation of the Oriental oecritics is exactly agreeable to what has been said.

Persons invested with riches, power, and authority, are the best enabled to give defence and protection. And therefore, in ch. 28, the wing is made the symbol of power and dignity. And as the wings of an eagle in particular, 'If a king dreams of finding an eagle's wing, it denotes that he shall obtain greater glory and riches than the kings his predecessors. And if a private person have such a dream, it shews that he will be greatly enriched, and highly honored and promoted by his sovereign.'

And again, 'If a king dream that an eagle takes him up upon his back, and flies upon high with him, it portends great exaltation to him in his kingdom, and long life. And the same dream to a private person denotes that he shall come to reign.'

And Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 20, says, 'If poor men dream of being mounted upon an eagle, they will be supported and well relieved by some rich persons.'

This symbol, as representing royal dignity, is well exemplified in Ex. 17:1, &c. 'The word of Jehovah also came to me, saying: 'Said man, put forth a dark speech, and speak a parable to the house of Israel, and say, Thus saith the Lord Jehovah, A great eagle, with great wings, with long feathers, full of plumage, and that had divers colors, came to Lebanon, and took the highest branch of a cedar: he crept off the top of its young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffic, &c.'

Here, by the great eagle, Nebuchadnezzar is meant, as appears by verse 12. He is fully represented by the eagle,

'Cui rex decorum regum in evagans Fervens.'

The 'divers colors,' Michaelis thinks, 'are an allusion to the various nations which composed the Babylonian empire.' The highest branch is Jehoichin, v. 12, 2 K. 24:12.

In verse 7th of the same chapter it is said,—'There was also another great eagle with great wings, and of much plumage,' &c., meaning the king of Egypt. See verse 15.

De. 28:49, 'A nation swift as the eagle flieth,' meaning either the Chaldeans or the Romans.

Jer. 48:40, 'He shall fly as an eagle over Moab.'

The Babylonian general or nation is here designed. Comp. 49:22.

Ho. 8:1, 'As an eagle the Assyrian couch against the house of the Lord.'

Shalmaneser is probably meant. See 2 K. 17:3,6.

Re. 4:7, 'The fourth living creature was like a flying eagle.'

These four living creatures seem to be the appendages of the chariot throne of God. The allusion is to the visions of Isaiah and Ezekiel, where the cherubim are described.

Re. 12:14, 'To the woman were given two wings of a great eagle.'

On this text Lowman observes: 'To bear as eagles' wings is an allusion to the strength and swiftness of an eagle's flight, and well expresses the readiness and power with which God often delivers the church out of its dangers. But whether the two wings of an eagle are here put to signify the eastern and western parts of the Roman empire, of which an eagle is the armorial ensign, is left to the reader's judgment.'

See more under CARCASS.
Is. 46:11, 'Calling from the East the eagle,' is a very proper emblem for Cyrus, as a ruler respects, so particularly because the centre of Cyrus was a golden eagle, arces Cyrenæ, as Xenophon mentions, Cyrop. b. 7, and see Lowth in loc. Cyrus came from the East, claimed to himself the prey of many nations.

EARTH is the symbol of a people in a state of peace, quietness, and submission, and at the same time, involved in idolatry or superstition. The reasons are,
1. In the symbolical language, the natural world represents the political. The heavens, sun, and luminaries, represent the government; and, consequently, the earth must represent the part governed, submitting and inferior to the part governing, and therefore earth signifies men in a state of peace.

2. The sea is frequently used to denote war in war and tumult; and therefore earth signifies men in a state of peace.

3. It is the usual style of the Scriptures to represent such men as are sinners, idolaters, and the covenant of grace, or at least states from it, by the names of earth, inhabitants of the earth, and the like, as in Ge. 1:11, 'Let the earth' signifies all men living there, &c.

'I have meat to eat which ye know not of,' Jn. 4:32; i. e. I have engagements which I prefer before bodily refreshment, viz. to bring these Samaritans to the knowledge of the truth. Ho. 4:8.

'They eat the sacrifices of my people, And they eat their heart on their iniquity;' meaning, they gladly partake of the daily sacrifices, without any attempts to reclaim the people from the sins which occasion them. Le. 6:36.

ECLIPSES. The same may be affirmed of eclipses of the heavenly bodies, as was said of earthquakes; (see under EARTHQUAKE), that they are seldom to be understood literally, but rather as symbolically denoting great political events. 'Great public calamities are described in the prophets, (says Bossuet), as if the order of nature was overturned—the earthquakes, the sun and moon are darkened, and the stars fall from heaven. There is no need to understand such expressions of real earthquakes and eclipses; the prophetic style plainly shows they are figurative expressions, describing great calamities and changes, which the judgments of God would bring upon the earth. Thus the prophet Isaiah, predicting a great destruction of God's enemies, for their opposition to his church, which he calls 'the day of the Lord's vengeance,' describes it in these terms, 34:—

'And all the host of heaven shall waste away,
And the heavens shall be rolled up like a scroll;
And all their host shall wither,
As the withered leaf falleth from the vine,
And as the blighted fruit from the fig-tree.'

The general meaning of which expressions is explained in the following verse—

'For my sword is made bare in the heavens;
Behold, on Edom it shall descend,
And on the people justly by me devoted to destruction.'
The same prophet thus writes in 13:10,
'Yea, the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof,
Shall not send forth their light;
The sun is darkened at his going forth,
And the moon shall not cause her light to shine.'

On which see Lowth's judicious note.
See also Jo. 2:10. Am. 8:9. Mat. 21:29, and other places.
Jo. 3:4.

'The sun shall be turned into darkness,
And the moon into blood.'

Aben Ezra expounds the words literally of the eclipses of the sun and moon, which, he says, are the signs of great wars. Maimonides, on the other hand, understands it by way of similitude, denoting the great calamities and distresses of the times spoken of. Sir Isaac Newton says, that these signs denote the ceasing of a kingdom, or the desolation thereof. But that this is not always the case, appears from Jo. 2:10. Sometimes the case is literally true in great wars, by reason of columns of smoke ascending from the burning cities, which darken the sun, and discolour the moon, or make it appear red and bloody, fire and smoke having that effect.

EGYPT. Re. 11:8, 'which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt.'

The great city here mentioned, is that which reigns over the kings of the earth, or Rome, the empress of the world, and is compared to Egypt, on account of its tyranny, persecution, cruelty, pride, impotence, and idolatry.

It is literally true, that our Lord was crucified there, since He was crucified by a Roman governor, who derived his power from Rome, and Judaea was then within the bounds of the empire. He was afterwards crucified there in his servants, the apostles and others, to whom whatever is done, He imputes as done to Himself.

EYES, on account of their light and use, are the symbols of government and justice. Thus the sun is called the eye of the world, as governing or enlightening it under God.

The sun is called the eye of the sky, by Aristophanes.

The moon, the eye of the evening, by Pindar, and the eye of the night, by Æschylus.

According to the Egyptian hieroglyphics, the eye is the observer of justice, and the keeper of the whole body.

Arsenidorus calls the eyes the leaders and rulers of the body.

And our Saviour says, 'The lamp of the body is the eye.' Mat. 6:22.

According to the Indian Interpreter, the eyes are the symbols of fidelity, glory, and knowledge.

On these accounts the angels of the Lord are called his eyes, Zech. 4:10, as being the executioners of his judgments, and watching and attending for his glory. See Mede's remarkable discourse upon this text,—and compare under SEVEN.

In imitation of this, the favorites and prime ministers of state in the Persian monarchy were called the king's eyes, according to the Oriental customs and notions.

So in Nu. 10:31, 'to be instead of eyes,' is equal to being a prince, to guide and rule the people.

In Pindar, Olymp. 9, the eye of Sicily is given as a title to one of the chief men in Sicily, showing his power. And thus also, in the same, 'the eye of the army,' stands for a good commander.

In De. 11:12, 'the eyes of the Lord' signify the divine providence.

In Jb. 9:25, 'the eye of the adulterer,' is his lascivious desire.

'Is thine eye evil, because I am good?' Mat. 20:15; i. e. art thou envious against thy brother, because I choose to show kindness to him?

Pr. 22:9, 'a bountiful eye,'—one that is liberal to the poor.

Da. 7:8, 'Eyes like the eyes of a man,' may signify the desires, designs, and behavior of a man; i. e. of a common or mean man.

Ex. 24:16, 'the desire of the eyes'; i. e. our great joy and delight. Euripides has 'the eye of life,' for the pleasure of life.

Eyes, as a flame of fire. See under FIRE.

F.

FACE. It is a singular privilege which is spoken of, Re. 22:4, as being granted to the servants of God, 'that they shall see his face.' The term in Greek, σπασμω, agrees with the Hebrew panim, and is used not only of animate and inanimate beings, but in an allegorical sense of God Himself, who is an infinite Spirit. When therefore it is ascribed to Him, it is to be explained σπασμω, in a manner becoming the Deity. It is very often so ascribed in Scripture; see Ge. 4:1, 32:30. Ex. 33:20. Jb. 27, 38, 44:4. 118:28. 149:14, &c. &c. But 'to see the face of God,' is a metaphor borrowed from the custom of Eastern kings, who sat on lofty thrones glittering with gold and diamonds, and manifested their majesty only to those ministers of theirs who were placed around their throne and in their presence, like Solomon's of old, 1 K. 10:8; and since men, for most part, represent to themselves the Supreme Being in a human form, hence, to be admitted into his immediate presence is called 'seeing his face.' The Gentiles always assigned to their deities the human figure. Hence the people of Lystra, Ac. 14:11, exclaimed, 'The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.' And Diodorus, b. 1, c. 12, says of Jupiter, Vulcan, Ceres, and Ocean, 'that they travel over the world, and appear to men sometimes in the shape of sacred animals, at other times in the human form.' And since the appearances of angels in Old Testament times were generally of this description, (see Jos. 5:13, and other passages,) it became natural to transfer, in the imagination of the beholder, the form of the messenger to Him who sent him.

'The face of God in Scripture denotes every thing by which God is wont to manifest Himself to men. Thus:

Ge. 3:8, 'Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence (face) of Jehovah God among the trees of the garden.'

Ps. 139:7, 8.
'Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?
Whither shall I flee from thy presence (face)?
If I climb up into heaven, there thou art;
If I should make the grave my bed, behold thou art there.'

Ex. 33:20, 'Thou canst not see my face: no man can see my face and live,' i. e. see my glory perfectly, while in the present sinful state. But after this mortal hath put on immortality, it shall be otherwise. 1 Jn. 3:2. 1 Co. 13:12.

Ge. 22:3, 'And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel (the face of God): for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved,' i. e. I have seen Him in a manifest manner, when compared with dreams and visions.

Ps. 42:2,
'My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God;
When shall I come and see the face of God?'
i. e. when shall he, on solemn days, pay his devotions at the sanctuary?

'The presence of Jehovah,' Ex. 33:14, 15; and the angel, Ex. 23:20, 21, is Jehovah Himself; but in Is. 63:9, an angel of his presence is opposed to Jehovah Himself. Thus, in Lowth's version:

'It was not an envoy, nor an angel of his presence, that saved them:
Through his love and his indulgence, He Himself redeemed
And He took them up, and He bore them, all the days of old.'

After their idolatrous worshipping of the golden calf, when God had said to Moses, 'I will send an angel before thee, I will not go up in the midst of thee,' the people mourned. God afterwards comforts Moses, by saying,

'My presence (that is, I, myself in person, and not by an angel) will go with thee.' See Ex. ch. 33.

As to any appearances of the Son of God under the Old Testament, by the name of angel or otherwise, however, they have been contended for by some divines, whose intention was to do honor to the Messiah, they seem to be denied by the apostle's reasoning in He. 1:2, where God is said to have spoken to men by his Son only in these last days.

The light of God's face is a token of his favor, and is therefore put synonymously with favor in Ps. 44:3. Da. 9:17.

Thus, in men, if the countenance be serene, it is a mark of good-will; if fiery or frowning, of anger or displeasure.

Face also signifies anger, justice, and severity, as in Ge. 16:8. Ex. 2:15. Ps. 18:1. Jo. 26. Ps. 34:16. Re. 6:16.

1 Co. 13:12, 'Now we see as in a mirror darkly, but then face to face'; i. e. the difference between our knowledge here and our knowledge hereafter in such, invisible things, being represented by visible—spiritual by natural—eternal by temporal.

To bow down the face in the dust, is, to bow down, is a mark of the lowest humiliation and submission.

FAT is the emblem of fertility, abundance, wealth.

Jer. 31:14, 'I will satiate the souls of the priests with fatness.'

Ps. 63:5, 'My soul shall be satiated as with marrow and fatness.'

Ge. 27:28, 'God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.'

In Jer. 5:28, the words, 'they are waxed fat,' are thus explained by the Targum—'they are become rich.' And so, in Ps. 22:29, the fat upon earth are the rich, the noble, and powerful.

And so, in Theocritus, Id. 7, v. 33, fat signifies rich or plentiful.

FEED. To feed others, signifies to give ease and plenty, to enrich and to provide with all worldly necessities. For, according to the notion of the ancients, and especially the Hebrew language, riches consist in meat and drink, in having plenty of the fruits of the earth and much cattle, with all things necessary to human life.

So Job and Abraham are said to be rich. And the rich man in the gospel is described by having plenty of corn and the fruits of the earth, more than his granaries could hold. And so, in Mat. 10:9,10, meat is made equivalent to gold, silver, brass, and clothes.

Ps. 36:8, 'Feed me with food convenient for me'; i. e. vouchsafe those blessings that are suited to my condition.

Jn. 21:15, 'Feed my lambs'; i. e. instruct new converts in the Christian doctrine.

Ho. 12:1, 'Ephraim feedeth on the wind'; i. e. he adopts empty and dangerous counsels.

FEET are taken metaphorically in various senses. Thus:

Jb. 29:15, 'I was feet to the lame'; i. e. I afforded assistance to the miserable and helpless.

Ge. 30:30, 'The Lord hath blessed thee at my feet'; i. e. through my solicitude in the care of thy cattle.

On the other hand, the 'foot of pride,' in Ps. 36:11, means the violence of haughty enemies.

'The slipping of the foot implies dangers and calamities; as in Jb. 12:25. Ps. 38:17. 116:6. 140:5, 12.

Jer. 13:16, 'Before your feet stumble upon the mountainous of plominess'; i. e. before you are brought into great calamities.

1 Pe. 2:8, Christ and his word are said to be a stone of stumbling to those who stumble at the word, being disobedient.

On the contrary, to keep the feet from slipping is a symbol of the divine protection against malignant enemies. Thus:

Ps. 121:3, 'He will not suffer thy feet to be moved.'

Pr. 3:23, 26, and other places.

Jer. 2:25, 'Keep back thy foot from being unshod'; i. e. take care not to expose thyself by thy wicked ways to the wretched condition of going into captivity unshod, as the manner is represented, Is. 30:4.

To be under any one's feet, denotes the subjection of a subject to his sovereign, or of a servant to his master. See Ps. 8:6, 'Thou hast put all things under his feet'; and compare He. 9:8, and 1 Co. 15:25, 27, &c.

Lameness in the feet generally denotes affliction or calamity, as in Ps. 35:15. 38:16. Jer. 20:10. Mi. 4:6, 7. Zech. 3:19; in which two last places the term is feminine, as referring to the word sheep understood. As Placcus observes: 'Est locutio sumpta ab ovibus, nam ea illos solent multo atque, presertim in calidibus illis regionibus, claudicare.'

position of this symbol. In ch. 283, they say, 'That if any one dreams that he finds or eats the flesh of dragons, he shall obtain riches proportionable from a great king,' which is like that of the Israelites eating the flesh of the Leviathan or dragon—the king of Egypt in the wilderness. Ps. 74:13,14.

And again, in ch. 285, 'To dream of eating the flesh of a scorpion, denotes the being possessed of the estate of such an enemy, as answers to the signification of the symbol.'

And the Indian, in ch. 87, says compendiously, 'Flesh is universally interpreted of riches.'

To the same purpose speaks also Artemidorus, who, in b. 3, c. 23, says, 'That it is not good for a rich man to dream that he eats his own flesh, for it signifies the utter wasting of his riches or substance.'

No also in b. 1, c. 72, 'to dream of eating the flesh of any wild beast, denotes the being greatly enriched by the substance of enemies.'

FLY. The name Beelzebub, given in the New Testament to the prince of demons, signifies 'lord of flies,' and the fly was his hieroglyphic, as Jerome remarks, because he never ceases to infest the human race, and to try all methods by which he may annoy and injure them.

See under BEE.

FOREHEAD signifies the public profession or appearance before men.

So the Indian Interpreter, ch. 51, says, 'The forehead and nose denote comeliness and riches before men.' And Artemidorus says, that the forehead signifies liberty of speech.

Of old, servants were stigmatised in their forehead by their master's mark. Martial, b. 2, ep. 29; b. 3, ep. 21; b. 8, ep. 75; Seneca de Ira, b. 3, c. 3; Plutarch in Nicias. This was forbidden the Jews in Le. 19:28; only the high-priest on his forehead bore a plate or crown of gold, on which the name of God was written, to show that the priest was his servant, and that all his service was consecrated to God only.

Hence, 'to receive a mark in one's forehead,' signifies to make an open profession of belonging to that person or party, whose mark is said to be received.

Re. 13:16, 'to receive a mark in the right hand, or in their foreheads.'

Some think there is here an allusion to the manner in which Ptolemy Philopater persecuted the Jews. See Prideaux, Connect. pt. 2, b. 2.

Sometimes the stigmata, or marks put on the forehead, were the symbol of disgrace and punishment, as Diogenes Laertius says of the father of Bion, b. 4, 'That he received a brand on his forehead, as a mark of the anger of his master.'

That captives, and others whom the ancients reduced to subjection, were thus marked, Plutarch tells us, in Periclit., that 'the Athenians marked an owl on their captives.'

Idolaters, by that ceremony, used to consecrate themselves to their false deities. The marks used on these occasions were various. Sometimes they contained the name of the god, sometimes his particular name, as the thunderbolt of Jupiter, the talent of Neptune, the ray of Bacchus, &c. or, lastly, they marked themselves with some mystical number, whereby the god's name was described. Thus the sun, who was signified by the number 698, is said to have been represented by these two numeral letters, XI.

These three ways of stigmatising are all expressed in Re. 13:16,17, 'And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.'

See Potter's Antiq. of Greece, v. 1, p. 75.

Soldiers also wore the names of their leaders or generals impressed upon their bodies, as we learn from Vegetius de Re milit. lib. 2, c. 5. And in this sense some explain Paul's remark in Ga. 6:17, 'I bear in my body the marks (ostyana) of the Lord Jesus,' meaning the scars he received from stripes, chains, &c. in the service of the gospel.

See also Is. 44:5, thus rendered by the Septuagint, 'And another shall write upon his hand, I belong to God.' See Lowth's note on the passage, where he observes, 'The Christians seem to have imitated this practice, by what Procopius says on this place of Isaiah: "Benevolenti many marked their wrists or their arms with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ."'

Whole people or nations were sometimes so inscribed. That the Babylonians, Dacians, and others, were, we learn from Pliny, Herodian, &c. That the Arabians were, Golius informs us. The Jews say, that king Jehoiakim wore the name of the idol Codonazar branded on his skin.

From these customs we may now conclude what meaning to attach to the phrase in Re. 22:4, 'And his name shall be in their foreheads,' viz. that such are the servants of the living God, the ministers of the King of kings, whom He hath redeemed by his own blood, Ac. 20:28. Ti. 2:14; so that they are his peculiar people, 1 Pe. 2:9, to celebrate the divine virtues. They serve Him day and night in His temple, Re. 7:15, as attendants on the celestial throne. Once they wore the mark of the beast and of Satan; but after they were redeemed, they bore the mark of the living God impressed upon them, by regeneration and sanctification. Ep. 4:22-24.

It implies also, that such are the soldiers of the Lord of hosts, who form his encampment, under the banner of Him 'who stands up for an ensign to the people,' Is. 11:10; wearing the sword of the Spirit, the shield of faith, and the breastplate of righteousness.

It implies that they are the priests of God, Re. 1:5. 1 Pe. 2:9. Under the Old Testament, the high-priest alone wore the plate of God; but now, all Christians are constituted kings and priests unto God even the Father. And therefore those who stand with the Lamb on mount Zion, Re. 14:1, have the Father's name written on their foreheads.

The name here inscribed, is supposed to be the name Jehovah, which is his memorial. Ho. 1:5. Zch. 14:20. Is. 44:5. As to the manner of inscribing, not to pursue sacred analogies too minutely, we may adopt Paul's expression, 2 Co. 3:3, 'written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God.' See also 2 Co. 1:21. Ep. 4:30.

The name is written on the forehead, obviously because it is the most conspicuous part, whatever is on the forehead, cannot be concealed. As Cicero says, 'Prom est latuitus mentis eringo,' and Pliny calls it, 'Omnium hominum affectuum index.' Hist. Nat. lib. 11, c. 37. The name of God, therefore, being on their foreheads, is an open confession that they profess publicly before the world that they belong to Him, and not to idolatry, antichristianism, the beast, or Satan. It is said of Paul, Ac. 9:15,16, 'He is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel. For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.'

FOREST is used symbolically to denote a city, kingdom, polity, or the like. Ez. 20:46, 'forest of the south.'

Ezekiel was in the northern part of Chaldaea; and therefore Judea was to the south of him. Secker supposes that a city is called a forest, rather from its inhabitants than its buildings.

Devoted kingdoms are elsewhere represented under the image of a forest, which God threatened to burn or cut down. See Is. 10:17,18,19,24, where the briars and thorns denote the common people; the glory of the forest are the nobles and those of highest rank and importance.

See also Is. 37:24, where Sennacherib is described as boasting thus of his invasion of Jerusalem:

'Thou hast said,

By the multitude of my chariots have I ascended
The height of the mountains, the sides of Lebanon;
And I will cut down his tallest cedars, his choicest fir-trees,
And I will penetrate into his extreme retreats, his recess forests.
Lach's Version.

See Jer. 21:14. 22:7. 43:23, and Zch. 11:2, where Newcome observes that under these images the fall of mighty men, and the subversion of the Jewish polity, are represented.

Is. 32:19,
'But the hail shall fall, and the forest be brought down,
And the city shall be laid level with the plain.'

Lowth acknowledges this passage to be very obscure. He supposes the city to be Nineveh or Babylon; and quotes Ephraim Syrus on the place, who interprets it 'Sattu, i. e. Assyrium regnum—civitas, i. e. magnifica Assyriorum castra.'

Lyra expounds these words in a singular way. 'The hail,' says he, 'that is, the multitude of the Roman army, shall be at the falling down of the forest, i. e. at the overthrow of the temple and palace.' Something parallel to the passage in Isaiah may be found in Re. 16:21, at the downfall of the mystic Babylon. 'And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent.' See under HAIL.

FOUNTAIN. See under WOMAN.
Continually-flowing water, in opposition to standing or stagnant pools, is the symbol of refreshment to the weary, and also denotes the perpetuity and inexhaustible nature of spiritual comforts and refreshments afforded to the saints by the Holy Spirit, and by the public worship of God. It was such as these the Psalmist thirsted after, as the hart panteth for the water-brook, when he was persecuted and driven from his throne, 'God being the fountain of living waters.'

After the same manner, wisdom, on account of its usefulness and delight, is compared in Pr. 18:4, to a flowing brook, which is generally clear, as well as shallow: a fit emblem of the ingenious mind, which knows no disguise or dissimulation, and whose designs are easily discovered, because, as good is always its object, it affects no concealment.

Zch. 13:1,

'In that day there shall be a fountain opened
To the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem,
For sin, and for defilement.'

The blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin (1 Jn. 1:7), is manifestly here intended, the Jews being, upon their repentance and conversion, to be admitted to all the privileges of the Christian covenant. The Hebrew words, rendered sin and defilement, are legal terms; the former denotes sin generally, or any transgression of the law which required atonement; the latter is used for that uncleanness which secluded man from all intercourse with God and holy things. Whatever efficacious legal sacrifices had in purifying the people, the same is ascribed to the blood of Christ in the gospel dispensation. In the term 'defilement,' there is an allusion to the water of separation, or of purification for sin, Nu. 19:9. Means of purification from moral pollution shall be afforded to the Jews by the terms of the Christian covenant. See Blayney.

Jo. 3:15, 'A fountain shall come forth from the house of Jehovah.'

In this verse, either the times of the Messiah are described, or we have a description of Jerusalem after its final restoration, when a golden age shall commence among its inhabitants, and when the knowledge of God and of his Christ shall a second time be widely diffused from it. See Ez. 47:8. Zch. 14:8.

Fountain, or pool, of SICHAM.

One of the most remarkable ceremonies performed at the feast of tabernacles, was the libation or pouring out of water, drawn from the fountain or pool of Sicham, upon the altar. As, according to the Jews themselves, this water was an emblem of the Holy Spirit, Jesus Christ manifestly alluded to it, when he cried, saying, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink.'

Pr. 5:16, 'Let thy fountains (or rather springs) be dispersed abroad,' i. e. May your posterity be numerous.

De. 33:28, 'The fountain of Jacob,' i. e. The people that proceed from Jacob.

Pr. 5:18, 'Let thy fountain be blessed,' i. e. Let thy wife be blessed with children, barrenness being esteemed a curse.

Pr. 13:14,

'The law of the wise is a fountain of life.'

Or rather, as Durell renders,

'The laws are to the wise a fountain of life;
To the rebellious, they are the source of death.'

Ez. 12:6, 'Ere the pitcher be broken at the fountain,' i. e. Before the circulation of the blood be stopped at the heart.

Ps. 86:36, 'Bless the Lord from the fountains of Israel,' i. e. Ye who are sprung from the stock of Israel.

Re. 8:10, 'Fountains of waters.' Re. 14:7. Re. 16:4.

See Lowman's excellent notes on the first and third of these passages.

Ho. 13:5, 'His fountains shall be dried up,' i. e. His prosperous condition and its attendant blessings shall cease.

As fountains of water may be considered as necessary to the support of life, so the drying up of these symbolically expresses a scarcity of things necessary. See the above passage in Ho. 13:5, and Is. 19:5.

Vitrings interprets Re. 8:10, of the heresy of Arius, and the third part of the rivers to mean the third part of Christians, which was then divided into East, West, and South.

Isaiah has a beautiful passage in allusion to the exodus, expressive of God's mercy to them in passing through the desert. See Is. 41:18.

FOUR is a symbolical number, denoting a universality of the matters comprised.

As, in Jer. 49:36, the four winds signify all the winds.

Is. 11:12, the four corners of the earth denote all parts of the earth.

Ez. 7:2, 'the four corners of the land,' i. e. all parts of Judea. 'And therefore,' as Philo says, 'four is a number of universality in nature.'

Restitution in some cases was to be made fourfold, Ex. 22:1. 2 S. 12:6. La. 1:9.

We read also of four bowls, four rings, four rows of stones, &c.

In Pr. ch. 30, the enumeration of several subjects is limited to four. See verses 15,16, 21,24,29.

Both Ezekiel and St. John describe four rivers

ing creatures, as seen in a vision, with four faces and four wings.

Daniel speaks of the four great monarchies, as four great beasts that came up from the sea. We read also, 8:8, of four notable horns.

Zechariah beholds also four horns, four carpenters, and four chariots. 1:18, 20, 6:1.

Ex. 27:1, the altar of burnt-offerings is commanded to be made four-square.

And in Re. 21:16, it is said of the New Jerusalem, that the city lieth four-square.

Four may justly, therefore, be termed a mystic number. The four angels mentioned, Re. 19:15, have been conceived by some to represent the Turkish tetrarchies, or the four kingdoms of the Turks seated on the Euphrates. But as four is a perfect number, denoting universality, it may, as Lowman observes, 1: note here the whole power of these destroyers, rathered together from every quarter of the earth and they dwell in.

FOX is the symbol of tyrannical kings and crafty persecutors.

Lu. 13:32, 'Go and tell that fox,' namely, Herod.

All know the character of the animal, from the many fables and proverbs respecting it; so that the fox is generally considered to be the representative of cunning, crafty, or deceitful persons. 'What is an opprobrious and malicious man, but a fox?' says Epictetus, in Arrian, lib. 1, cap. 3. And Suidas, 'A fox is not to be won by gifts.' And Plutarch, in his life of Lysander, 'If a lion's skin is not enough, let a fox's be added; for if power and strength be not sufficient, cunning must be added to them. Agamemnon is said by Homer to be ῥηιδέσθεος, to be endowed with a fox's disposition; and Pompey is described by Plutarch as having more of the fox than the lion in him. And Persius says, Sat. 5,

'Antium rapide seras sub pectore vulpem;

and Aristophanes has compared soldiers to foxes, Hipp. Act. 2, sc. 2. Ezekiel, 13:4, says,

'The prophets, O ye, are like the foxes in the deserts;' i. e. as Newcome observes, 'They wize their prey in a cunning and cowardly manner, and then fly into lurking-places;

some have gone so far, as to suppose our Saviour spoke figuratively, rather than literally, when he said, Mat. 8:20, 'Foxes have holes or dens, and the birds of the air have places to roost in; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.' They suppose he means by foxes the false teachers among the Jews; but he seems to be straining things too much.

FROGS are represented by Aristophanes and Juvenal as the proper inhabitants of the Scythian lake. See Arist. Ranæ; Juv. Sat. 2,

l. 150.

Horace gives them the epithet of nasty,

Spod. 5, v. 19, and makes their blood an ingredient in sortilegious charms.

The same epithet is also given them in Devil, Met. 5; and Martial, b. 10, Ep. 37.

The Oriental oneirocritics are not so clear in this point as they usually are; for they concent themselves with ranking the frogs among serpents and other creeping things, taking them to signify enemies in general.

Philo says, 'They are the symbol of vain pretensions and glory, having only noise and words void of reason.'

Artemidorus says, 'Frogs signify impostors and flatterers, and bode good to them that get their living out of the common people.'

And the frog, by the Egyptians, was made the symbol of an impudent, quick-sighted fellow; the frog, according to them, having blood in where else in its eyes. See Horap.

hierogl. b. 2.

Re. 16:13, 'I saw three unclean spirits like unto; a plain allusion to the plagues of Egypt.

Daubuz supposes the three unclean spirits to be the monks, the religious knights, and the ecclesiastical clergy of the Roman church.

Lowman says, 'They seem to intimate some conspiracy of the principal Polish powers.'

FURNACE is used in Scripture to denote, metaphorically, a place of great affliction. So

Is. 4:20, 'The Lord hath taken you and rought you forth out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt.' See also Jer. 11:4.

Fire of a furnace for purifying metals, is always used to signify such afflictions as are sent for the amendment of men. So in Jer.

5:7, 'I will melt them and try them;' if he could by such means purify their manners, in all others had proved ineffectual for their amendment.

See the process beautifully enlarged upon in

Is. 22:17-23, where the term furnace might here fitly be rendered crucible, the vessel in which metals are fused. And so, in Is. 12:7,

'Silver refined in a crucible of earth.' Refiners' crucibles are to this day made of earth.

The plane of torment seems to be called a 'furnace.' Mat. 13:42, 50.

G.

GARDEN is the symbol of prosperity and fruitfulness.

Jb. 8:16,

'He is green before the sun,

And his branch shooteth forth in his garden.'

Is. 5:3,

'He shall make her wilderness like Eden,

And her desert like the garden of Jehovah;

Joy and gladness shall be found in her,

Thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.'

The world in general is sometimes spoken of as a garden, and kings and great men as tall trees in it. Thus, Ez. 31:8, 9, speaking of Pharaoh,

'The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him;

The fir-trees were not like his branches:

And the plane-trees were not as his branches:

Not any tree in the garden of God

Was like unto him in his beauty.

I made him beautiful in the multitude of his branches,

So that all the trees of Eden envied him,

Which were in the garden of God.'

In this sense, also, Tertullian explains the parable in Lu. 13:19, of the grain of mustard-seed cast into the garden, by which he understands Christ, who came into this world. And see Is. 61:11,

'Surely, as the earth pusheth forth her tender shoots,

And as a garden maketh her seed to germinate,

So shall the Lord Jehovah cause righteousness to spring forth.

And praise, in the presence of all the nations.'

Nothing is more frequent among the fathers, than under the symbol of a garden to describe the doctrine of grace. Thus Jerome, on Jer.

29: says, 'The sacred doctrine is called a garden, as being a paradise of delights, where all hope and good works flourish.' See Bernard on Song 4; and Gregory on Ezekiel, humily 8.

The church is often compared to a garden by the prophets. Thus, Is. 58:11, 'Thou shalt be like a well-watered garden;' and Jer. 31:12,

'And their souls shall be as a well-watered garden.'

As to those passages in the Song of Songs, where a garden is mentioned, no note is to be taken of them, farther than as simple and literal comparisons, as it is more than doubtful whether that book has any spiritual meaning, or is any thing more than an epithalamium, or marriage-ode, in relation to Solomon's espousals, and in praise of the divine institution of holy wedlock. The mystical sense seems to have been first adopted by some of the fathers, who,

with more piety than judgment, as Durell observes, thought that, as Paul compares the union of Christ with his church to a marriage, this poem ought also to be interpreted with reference to the same subject.

But how is it consistent with this idea, that neither the name of God nor of Christ ever occurs in it?—that there is not one religious or moral sentiment to be found in it?—that it is not once either quoted or in the most distant manner alluded to in any part of the New Testament, or in any other part of the sacred writings?—that it is not directed to be read in the churches?—and that those who attempt to trace the allegory in every part, are soon lost in an inextricable labyrinth? The mere similarity, real or supposed, of some expressions in the New Testament, proves nothing; neither is mere length of time during which the opinion of its mystical meaning has been held, a solid foundation for the basis of truth to rest upon.

Garden is the symbol of the church triumphant. Lu. 23:43, 'This day shalt thou be with me in paradise;' i. e. in a garden of pleasure. See also 2 Co. 12:4, and Re. 2:7. The Turks or Mahometans, it is well known, describe their heaven under this image. See the Koran.

The people of God are often spoken of as plants. Ps. 80:8,

'Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt,

Thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.'

See Is. 5:1, &c. Jer. 2:21, and other places.

And hence good works are so often adverted to under the image of fruit. And God is spoken of as a vine-dresser, Jn. 15:1; and Paul uses similar phrases in 1 Co. 3:8, 'I have planted,

Apollus watered, and God hath given the increase.'

Gardens and vineyards, in ancient times, were surrounded with walls, and guarded by watchmen. To this there is allusion in Jer.

27:5,

'I Jehovah keep it;

I will water it every moment,

I will take care of it by night,

I will keep guard over it by day.'

To those who admire descriptions of this kind, Homer's account of the gardens of Alcibiades, in Odyssey, b. 7, will give gratification.

The passage is too long to be transcribed here at large; the following is part of Pope's version:

'Tall, thriving trees confessed the fruitful mould,

The reddening apple ripens here to gold;

Here the blue fig with luscious juice o'erspreads,

With deeper red the full pomgranate glows.

The branch here buds beneath the weighty pear,

And verdant olives flourish round the year.

The apostle has a still finer enumeration,

when he describes the fruits of the Spirit, Ga.

5:22, love, joy, peace, concord, benignity, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Compare

Ti. 2:14.

Gardens were employed to produce aromatic herbs and flowers; and hence we find the term odor, savor, or fragrance, in use among Eastern writers. Thus Paul says, 'We are unto God

a sweet odor in Christ;' and similar passages.

And in another place, Phil. 4:17, 'I desire fruit that may abound to your account. But I have all, and abound: I am full, having received from Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odor of a sweet smell.'

Gardens were sometimes used as places of sepulture. Thus Manasseh was buried in the garden of his own house, 2 K. 21:18; and that wherein the Savior was interred was in Joseph's garden. Mk. 15:46. Eusebius says of Galba, that he was buried in his own gardens in the Aurelian Way. And Onuphrius Pan-crinius says, 'In the Flaminian, Appian, and other ways, there still appear many urns and ancient sepulchres, almost consumed with age.'

GARMENTS are naturally used to denote the outward appearance.

Clean garments are an emblem of inward purity.

White garments also denote holiness of life and purity of conscience. Ps. 51:7. Is. 1:18,

Ec. 9:7, 8.

They were the tokens of joy and pleasure.

Ec. 9:8. Is. 52:1, 61:10.

Kings and nobles were arrayed in white garments; so were the common people on festive days.

God gave the Jewish priests white garments, as ensigns of honor, as well as of purity. Ex.

28:2, 40. Le. 16:4.

Hence, to be clothed in white signifies, in the prophetic style, to be prosperous and successful—to be honored and rewarded.

Not to defile one's garments is a Hebrew phrase, and is also symbolical, denoting, not to pollute one's self with idolatry, and to abstain from all inferior kinds of pollution. See

Re. 3:4, 'Thou hast a few names,' i. e. persons,

'even in Sardis, who have not defiled their garments,' i. e. who have preserved themselves from the general corruption, 'and they shall walk with me in white, for they deserve it.'

White or shining garments are here promised, as marks of favor and distinction. Thus Pharaoh honored Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen. Ge. 41:42. And in Re. 19:8, fine linen is interpreted to mean the righteousness of saints, as well as a mark of honor.

The bride is said to be 'arrayed in it, clean and white,' in allusion to the custom in the Eastern nations; a custom still existing, for the bridegroom to present the bride with garments. It was used in the times of the patri-archs, and was the custom among the Greeks and Romans. Eurip. Helen, v. 1348; Terence, reason. Hence, to show one's garments is to make reason the rule of one's actions.

To bestow garments, as is sometimes done by Eastern princes, is a great honor and mark of favor—if a stole or tunic, very great; if with it he adds the great cloak or robe, it is a complete favor. The highest mark of esteem and love is when the prince gives the garments from his own body, as Jonathan did to David, 1 S. 18:4.

Garments of scarlet were worn by the Roman emperors, as their proper habit. Hence Pilate's soldiers, as being Romans, in derision clothed our Savior as a king, by putting on him a scarlet robe, Mat. 27:28.

Garments of sackcloth. Sackcloth signifies any matter of which sacks were anciently made, which was generally of skins without dressing. The ancient prophets were for most part clothed thus; hence the false prophets affixed this garb, for which God upbraids them in Zech. 13:4, 'Neither shall they wear a garment of hair to deceive.' And so our Lord describes that sort of men, Mat. 7:15, 'Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing.'

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, 11:37, in enumerating the great things which have been done and suffered, through faith, by prophets and other righteous persons, mentions this, that 'they wandered about in sheep-skins and gait-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented,' alluding to the persecutions to which many of them were exposed from idolatrous princes. That Elijah was habited in this manner is well known, 2 K. 1:8. Clement, in his First Epistle to the Corinthians, says, 'Let us be imitators of those who went about in goat-skins and sheep-skins, preaching the coming of Christ; we mean Elias, and Elishae, and Ezekiel, the prophets.' Elijah, as a sign that he considered Elisha his successor, left him his mantle, which the latter put on, having rent and cast away his own clothes, 2 K. 2:12,13; and, therefore, when the sons of the prophets saw him with that garment, they said immediately, that 'the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha.' So Isaiah, 50:2, had a sackcloth upon his loins as a prophet; and John Baptist wore something similar, Mat. 3:4, not only as a prophet, but also as a Nazirite.

Sackcloth was also the habit of mourners and persons in affliction; Ge. 37:34. 2 K. 6:30. Ps. 37:11. Is. 50:2; and perhaps the prophets wore it as a sign of their mourning for the sins of the people, and for the dishonor their God suffered thereby; and hence all of them preached repentance.

The filthy garments of Joshua the high-priest, in Zech. 3:3, are the squalid and polluted garments of a captive; and the removal of them, and clothing him with goodly apparel, probably imports that the priestly office was to be renewed and exercised with decency and splendor.

The Phœnicians, in a time of misery, put on sackcloth and sat on the dunghill, as appears from Menander, whose words are preserved by Porphyry in his Book de Abstinencia, b. 4, § 15.

The Romans had also the same custom; and hence black and dirty garments are, in the oneirocritics, the symbols of great affliction.

There is a sublime passage in Is. 61:1, &c., where the Messiah seems to be described in the habit of a conqueror after some great victory:

Quest.—Who is it that cometh from Elam,
With garments defiled from Borsam;
This that is mightiest in his apparel,
Marching on in the greatness of his strength?

Ans.—I who publish righteousness, and am mighty in arm.

Quest.—Who is this apparel red,
And thy garments as one that treadeth the wine-vat?

Ans.—I have trodden the wine-vat alone,
And of the people there was none with me.

See Lowth on the place.

See Re. 19:13.

When the apparel of Supreme Deity is attempted to be described, it is in such terms as these, Ps. 104:1,2—

'Thou art clothed with honor and with majesty,
'Thou coverest Thyself about with light as with a garment,' &c.

GATES are sometimes put for cities, as in Is. 14:31,

La. 2:9,
'Howl, O gate; cry out, O city.'

Ps. 147:13,
'Her gates are sunk into the earth.'

'He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates;
'He hath shalled thy children within thee.'

They are the symbol of power, government, security; justice being originally administered without the gates of cities. The gate of the city was the forum, or place of public concourse. Pr. 1:21. 8:3. There also was the court of judicature held, for trying all causes, and deciding all affairs. There also was the market, where corn and provisions were sold. See De. 25:7. Ru. 4:1,9. 2 S. 15:2. 2 Ch. 18:9. La. 5:14. Pa. 127:5. Pr. 22:22. 24:7. 31:23. Am. 5:15.

The square town, which is the principal entrance to the Alhambra, or red palace of the Moorish kings in Grenada, from its being the place where justice was summarily administered, was styled the gate of judgment.

The Turkish government is also known at this day by the name of the Ottoman Porte, because the royal palace of the Turks is wont to be called Porta. Thus Leunclavius, Hist. Turc. lib. 13, 'Adeoque paucis rem omnium expeditum, Imperio suo totum subjecti Europæam Rumiæ et Portam seu regiam suam ad Vardarim Genizem transtulit.'

Is. 60:11,

'Thy gates shall be open continually;
'By day or by night, they shall not be shut;'

denoting the security of God's people; for gates open are a sign of peace; gates shut, of fear, or of a state of war, or of affliction, misery, and desolation. Jn. 20:19. Cæsar de Bello Gall. lib. 3, c. 4, 'portas clausurunt.' Jer. 20:19, where the prophet says, 'The cities of the south are shut up, and none openeth;' meaning that they were uninhabited, and of course the gates were kept shut, and not opened for the admission of passengers to and fro.

In Is. 29:21,

'Who bewilder the poor man in speaking,
'And bid salutes for him that pleased in the gate,'

there is allusion to what is before mentioned, namely, the distribution of justice. Shaw, in his Travels, says, 'They are heard by the treasurer, master of the horse, and other principal officers in the regency of Algiers, who sit constantly in the gate of the palace for that purpose.' p. 315, fol. He adds, in a note, 'The Ottoman court likewise seems to have been called the Port, from the distribution of justice, and the despatch of public business, that is carried on in the gates of it.'

The prophet Amos has a reference to the same custom, 5:10,

'Ye that hate him who reproverh in the gate,
'And abhor him who speaketh uprightly.'

Selden has this quotation from Maimonides: 'In urbe qualibet Israelitica constituebant Syædrium minus, cujus sedes in porta urbis.'

There is a well-known sense of the term gate, which refers to it either as the cause of something done or intended, or else as the medium leading to some end. In this sense Jacob speaks of the visionary ladder; he calls it 'the gate of heaven;' and our Lord speaks of the broad and narrow gate and way, the one leading to life, the other to perdition. Mat. ch. 7. Lu. 13:24.

The cause of joy or grief is called a gate by the poets. Thus, Ovid, lib. 2, de Porto, Eleg. 7, 'letitie janua clausa mæi;' and lib. 1, de Remed. Amor. 'artis tristissima janua nostræ.' And Lucretius, b. 3, v. 830,

'Haud igitur Leti præclausa est janua mentis.'

And Ovid, b. 1, Met.,

'Præclausa janua leti,
'Æternum nostris locus extendit in avum.'

It would appear that altars were formerly erected before the gates. See 2 K. 23:8, 'He brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua, the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.' And Ac. 14:13, 'Then the priest of Jupiter, who was before their city, brought filleted oxen to the gates, and would have offered sacrifice with the people.' Jupiter was accounted the tutelary deity of the place, and his temple stood near the gates.

In Mat. 16:18, there is a well-known passage to this effect: 'Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hades, i. e. death, shall not prevail against it.' The gate of hades is a natural periphrasis for death itself, and corresponds with Hezekiah's expression in Is. 38:10,

'I shall pass through the gates of the grave;
'I am deprived of the residue of my years.'

In the Wisdom of Solomon, we have a similar expression, 16:13, 'Thou hast power of life and death; Thou leadest to the gates of hades, and bringest up again.'

And Homer makes Achilles say,

'Who can think one thing, and another tell,
'My soul detests him as the gates of hell.'

That is, I hate him as death, or I hate him mortally. To say, then, that the gates of hades shall not prevail against the church, is, in other words, to say, it shall never die, it shall never be extinct. All the errors, superstitions, controversies, all the persecutions, edicts, tortures, with which the church has been visited, have not proved mortal, and never shall. See Campbell's Dissert. 6, part 2, § 7.

It is well known that, under or at the gates of Eastern cities, conversations are held, hospitality to the passing traveller is dispensed, and the most important transactions in commerce are carried on. Hence we hear of Mordecai sitting in the king's gate; and in La. 5:14, that the elders have ceased from the gate; and in Kn. 3:11, 'All the gate (that is, house) of my people know that thou art virtuous.' We also find Jacob, at an earlier period, saying, 'This is the gate of heaven;' and Hezekiah, in Is. 38:10, 'I shall go to the gates of the grave;' and our Lord, in Mat. 16:18, thus expressing Himself, 'The gates of hell shall not prevail against it.' He also uses this simile twice when He says, 'Enter ye in at the strait gate,' &c.

GEMS were originally used in divination, especially among the Egyptians. Theod. Sc. lib. 1, p. 48. Something of this kind is supposed to be meant in the investiture of Joseph by Pharaoh with a ring and chain, Ge. 41:41, &c.; the gold chain, the badge of the chief judge, being for the image of truth, as they called it; and the ring being not given to real orders or decrees, but as a magical ring or talisman, to prevent fascinations and delusions, and to divine by.

To keep the Israelites from the use of magic, to which the Egyptians were much addicted, God ordered a breastplate of judgment to be made for Aaron, in which were to be set, in sockets of gold, twelve precious stones, bearing the names engraven on them of the twelve tribes of Israel. This was to be used as an oracle on great emergencies, and the stones were called Urim, Aræ or lights, and Thummim, perfections or truth: perfection and truth, in the Scripture style, being synonymous in sense, because what is perfect is truly done, neither false, nor vain, nor yet unexecuted, but accomplished.

The primary notion of αληθεια, truth, seems to be that of revelation or the discovery of a thing which, being hidden before, is no longer so: τὸ μὴ ἄδηλον, is αληθές, that is, true, which is no more hidden.

See much on the Egyptian divinations in Jamblicus de Mystéria.

The oracles of God are frequently compared to light or fire; as in Ps. 119:130, and other places.

Christ calls Himself the light of the world; He is the true Urim and Thummim, the dispenser of the oracles of God. Jn. 8:12.

It appears from the manner in which they were anciently used, that gems may be considered as the symbols of judgment and government, and as the symbols of the divine oracles, especially of such as are prophetic: both which they aptly represent, on account of their light, brightness, and sparkling.

It was a saying of a Chinese king, (Moral. Confuc. lib. 2, p. 45,) 'I have four ministers of state, who govern with great precision: the provinces I have committed to them: those are my precious stones; they can enlighten a thousand furlongs.'

All the Oriental oneirocritics affirm, that precious stones and pearls are the symbols of government; and the Indian Interpreter expressly asserts, that 'they are, for the most part, to be interpreted of the divine oracles, and of the wisdom and knowledge of God.'

As gems are substances of a permanent or durable nature, the symbols from them are only used about matters of a constant and long duration. Thus, Mat. 13:45,46, 'the pearl of great price.'

Sometimes the manner of God's appearance is described by images of this kind: as in Ec. 24:10, 'He stood upon a paved work of sapphires-stones, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness;' denoting calmness, serenity, good will.

The colors of gems, white, red, blue, green, are explained by the Indian Interpreter, ch. 26.

There is a beautiful passage in Is. 54:11, &c., where the imagery is taken from gems:

'O thou afflicted, beaten with the storm, distressed of counsel,
'Behold I lay thy stones in cement of vermilion,
'And thy foundations with sapphires;
'And I will make of rubies thy battlements,
'And thy gates of carbuncles,
'And the whole circuit of thy walls shall be of precious stones.'

These, as Lowth observes, are general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the Eastern nations, and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely and particularly explained, as if they had each of them some precise moral or spiritual meaning.

Tobit, in his prophecy of the final destruction of Israel, describes the new Jerusalem in the same Oriental manner: 'For Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold. And the stones of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, carbuncle, and stones of Ophir.' Tobit 13: 17.

Compare also Re. 21:18-21.

There are several enumerations of gems in Scripture, viz. in Ex. 28:17-20. Ez. 28:13. Re. 19, &c.; but it is extremely difficult to determine what their real names are. Rabbi Abraham Ben David thinks those mentioned in Ex. re., — the carnelian, the topaz, the ceruonia, carbuncle, the sapphire, the diamond, the kols, the jacinth, the onyx, the chrysolite, the emerald, and the Jasper.

Those mentioned by Ezekiel are, the ruby, the topaz, the diamond, the beryl, onyx, and peridot, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle.

Dr., according to the Septuagint, the sardius, sapphire, emerald, carbuncle, sapphire, and jacinth, the ligure and agate, amethyst, chrysolite, ruby, and onyx.

For those mentioned in the Revelation, see passage.

GIRDLE. The symbol of strength, activity, and power.

Thus Jb. 12:18,

'He looseth the bond of kings,
And girdeth the girdle upon their loins.'

'Looseth the bond, or band, may be meant, depriving them of their strength.' He taketh away their mighty power, which was originally his gift.

So in verse 21,

'He pouereth contempt upon princes,
And weakeneth the strength of the mighty.'

Literally, looseth the girdle.

Is. 33:10, what in our version is, 'there is no more strength,' is, literally, there is no more girdle; though Lowth thinks it refers to the mound that kept in the waters, acting as a girdle to restrain them.

Is. 5:27, 'Nor shall the girdle of their loins be loosened;' i. e. they shall be persons in full vigor and strength.

On which passage Lowth remarks: 'The eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them; when their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle, therefore, denotes strength and activity; and to unloose the girdle, is to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action. God promises to unloose the girdles of kings before Cyrus. Is. 45:1. The girdle is so essential a part of a soldier's equipment, being the last that he puts on to make himself ready for action, that to be ungirded, ἀσπίδα, with the Greeks, means to be completely armed, and ready for battle. It is used in the same manner by the Hebrews — Let not him that girdeth himself boast as he that unlooseth his girdle; that is, triumph before the war is finished. 1 K. 20:11.

Jb. 30:11, a very obscure passage: 'Because I have relaxed my cord, I may mean, because I have loosened my girdle;' i. e. he hath weakened my strength; as it is added, 'and afflicted me.' But see Durell on the passage, and Parkhurst on וַיִּרְדּוּ, der.

Is. 11:5,
'And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins,
And faithfulness the cinchure of his reins.'

e. a zeal for justice and truth shall make him active and strong in executing the great work which he shall undertake.

Is. 22:21,

'I will strengthen him with thy girdle,
And thy government will I commit to his hands.'

where the latter expression appears to be synonymous to the former, as it often happens in the prophets.

Is. 45:5, 'I will gird thee, though thou hast not known Me;' i. e. I will strengthen thee.

And so, in other places, to gird is the same as to strengthen and to arm.

The oneirocritics explain a girdle of the principal servant or keeper of the house, who presides over the strength thereof.

And, according to them, to be girded with a girdle, signifies that the person who so is, shall arrive, in the middle of his age, to the greatest power and renown, and have a right to succeed him.

Girdles were anciently of very valuable materials; and hence Solomon's virtuous woman said to make rich girdles, and sell them to a merchant. Pr. 31:24. But John the Baptist was one of latter, as his type Elijah had been. Mat. 3:4. 2 K. 1:8. Paul's girdle is referred to by Ananias, in Ac. 21:11. Our Lord prohibits to his disciples the carrying the money in their girdles, Mat. 10:9. Mk. 6:9, which were made into a kind of purse, as still usual in Eastern countries. The Roman soldiers used the same custom. Hence, in præ, 'qui zonam perdidit,' means one who has lost his purse. And in Aulus Gellius, lib. 1. c. 12, C. Gracchus is introduced saying,

'Cum Roma profectus sum, Quirites, zonas quas argenti plenas extuli, eas ex provincia inanes retuli;' i. e. those girdles which I carried out full of money when I went from Rome, I have, at my return from the province, brought home empty. See Parkhurst and Wetstein.

The images of the Chaldeans portrayed upon the wall with vermilion, Ez. 23:14, are represented as being girded with girdles upon their loins.

Suidas interprets ζώνη by ἀξίωμα, an office, dignity, or authority. And Justinian, Imper. Nov. 12, writes, 'The punishment for contracting an incestuous marriage is confiscation of goods, also banishment, and the taking away of the girdle, if he possesses any, that is, of all his dignity — hoc eat universæ dignitatis.' Hence the old epithet:

'Arbitrio Regum Quæstus Cingula Sumit
Sicemate Francipio, Plus Fœditate Cloas.'

The girdle is sometimes used as a symbol of union: 'Preserving the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,' — 'charity or love, the bond of perfectness.' In both these passages, there is an allusion to the girdle, which encircles the whole body. The loins being girt, is, according to Pier. Hierogl. p. 1, p. 428, the symbol of temperance. Hence the apostolic expressions, 'Gird up the loins of your minds, ἀσκήσητε, and hope to the end,' &c.

In Jer. ch. 13, one of the symbols is, a linen girdle left to rot, which is explained at v. 11 to mean the people of Israel, whom God redeemed of old, and attached to Himself by a special covenant, that as a girdle serveth as an ornament to the wearer, so they should be subservient to the honor of his name. But it is added, 'they would not hearken,' or conform to his intentions; therefore, being polluted with the guilt of their disobedience, they were in that state, and on that very account, to be carried into captivity; conformably to which, the prophet was directed not to put the girdle in water, that is, not to wash it, but to leave it in that filthiness which it had contracted in the wearing.

Among the visions of Daniel, we find one in 10:5, where he sees 'a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz.' The whole description very much resembles that in Re. 1:13, 'One like unto a son of man,' i. e. in the human form, 'clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the breasts with a golden girdle.'

Diodorus Siculus, b. 17, writes thus of Alexander, εἰς τὴν Περσίδα, &c. 'Then he put on the Persian diadem, and clothed himself with a white tunic, with the Persian girdle.'

The seven angels mentioned in Re. 15:6, are described as 'having their breasts girded with golden girdles,' resembling the habit which the high-priests wore when he went into the most holy place, and consulted the oracle.

GLASS, being a brittle substance, is a very suitable emblem of fragility. The oneirocritics generally consider it to denote a short-lived state. Horace gives the epithet of glass to Fame, b. 2, sat. 3, v. 222.

Glass, also, on account of its transparency, is used as a symbol expressive of beauty. Hor. b. 1, Od. 17, l. 20.

And in the poets waters, fountains, rivers, or seas, are often compared to glass. Hor. b. 3, Ode 13; Virgil, Æn. b. 7, v. 759.

Mention is made in Re. 4:6, and 15:2, of a sea of glass, like unto crystal, concerning the meaning of which interpreters vary; but it is probably an allusion to the braten sea spoken of in 1 K. 7:23, and elsewhere, containing water for the priests to wash with, that they might not minister before God under any pollution.

That the ancients understood the art of making the artificial substance called glass, is put beyond all doubt by the writings of Aristotle, Lucretius, and others. See Philo's embassy to Calus Caligula.

Horace has, b. 2, Od. 13,

'O sine Blanditis splendebit vitro.'

'O thou Blandian spring, more bright than glass.'

And Ovid. Heroid. Ep. 15, line 158,

'Vitæque magis pellucidus amne.'

'Clearer than the glassy stream.'

What is called a glass in 1 Co. 13:12, Ja. 1:23, is properly a mirror; and the ancient mirrors were not of glass, like ours, but of brass, (see Ex. 38:8), and were consequently liable to spots and rust.

Re. 21:18, 'And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass;' i. e. it shone with the brightness of crystal. See Lowman's note in loc.

GOATS, from their offensiveness, mischievous and libidinous disposition, &c., are symbols of the wicked, who are, at the day of judgment, to be finally separated from the good. Mat. 25:33.

According to Clarke, 'goats denote hypocrites; for goats were clean both for sacrifice and for food.' Mat. 24:51.

But goats sometimes signify princes, as in Zech. 10:3, where Newcome translates, 'the chief ones.' See Is. 14:9; and the Chaldee has a word equivalent to principes.

GOG and MAGOG. These names occur only in Ez. 38:2, &c. 39:11, and Re. 20:8.

They seem to be taken allegorically for such princes and powers as are, in the last days, to unite to persecute the church of God, and to oppose the new order of things which is to follow the destruction of the beast and the false prophet.

We learn from Ge. 10:2, that Magog was the second son of Japheth.

Ezekiel uses Magog for the country of which Gog was prince.

Michælis compares the word Gog with Kak, or Chak, the general name of kings among the ancient Turks, Moguls, Tartars, Carians, and Chinese, (Spic. Geog. p. 34,) and thinks that Magog denotes those vast tracts of country to the north of India and China, which the Greeks called Scythia, and we, Tartary. The Turks are generally allowed to be of Scythian origin. Scythopolis and Hierapolis, which the Scythians took when they overcame Syria, were ever after by the Syrians called Magog. See Plin. b. 5, c. 23; Mede's Disc. 50, p. 280. The Arabs call the Chinese wall, 'Sud Yagot et Magog,' that is, Agger Gog et Magog, or the Mound of Gog and Magog. See Hyde's Works by Sharpe, li. 426.

The Scythians ruled over Media for twenty-two years, before they were expelled from that country by Cyaxares, early in the reign of Zedekiah. After their expulsion, Nebuchadnezzar assisted in invading them. It follows, that at this time they were a remarkable people on the theatre of the world. See Newcome on Ezekiel.

Gog is called the 'prince of Rhos, Meshech, and Tubal.'

Rhos is understood of a people by the Septuagint, Symmachus, Theodotion, and Houbigant. Bochart shows that the river Araxes was called Rhos; whence the Rusii, who seem to have first settled in Taurica Chersonesus. Geogr. b. 3, c. 13.

Tubal and Meshech were sons of Japheth. Ge. 10:2. The people called Tiberani, and Maschi, are probably here meant, who are generally mentioned together, and were situated towards mount Caucasus. See Bochart, Michælis, and Newcome.

There is reason to believe, that what is now read Agag in Nu. 24:7, is a corruption, and should be read Gog, as in the Septuagint versions, the Samaritan text, and the Greek text of Symmachus (see Poll. Syn. in loc.); and it is likely that, in the days of Moses, this was the common name of the princes of some powerful people; so powerful, that to say, the king of Israel, meaning David, or rather the Messiah, should be higher than Gog, or exalted over Gog, was to say every thing expressive of power and of extensive dominion. Hence the chief of the host, who, in the latter days, is to come from the same quarter against the land of Israel, is thus denominated. The very name also might become proverbial.

In the Koran, ch. xviii., Gog and Magog are said to waste the land, and a wall is mentioned which Gog and Magog could not scale, neither could they dig through it. They are also mentioned in ch. xxi.; but nothing is said to convey an idea what persons or people were understood by these names. It is not improbable that Mahomet borrowed these, and many other allusions, from the sacred writings, in order to give his pretended revelations a greater resemblance to genuine Scripture.

It is probable, according to the notion of the Arabians, that Gog and Magog formerly inhabited the mountains of the Hyperboreans, and that they were known to the ancients by this name. This nation is unquestionably famous in antiquity, and there is reason for imagining, that they were some of the Scythians, and confounded among the Great and Little Tartars, and perhaps among the Muscovites and other northern people. See Wells's Geogr. vol. 1. p. 140; Rees's Cyclop., and Calmet's Dict., article Gog.

The Gog and Magog of Revelation cannot be literally understood of the nations so called in the Old Testament; for there Gog the prince, with the people of Magog, came out of the north parts, where the posterity of Magog was seated; but the Gog and Magog of the Apocalypse are said to be nations which are in the four quarters of the earth. As, therefore, the Apocalyptic Babylon is not Babylon in Chaldea, but a counter type thereof, so the Apocalyptic Gog and Magog are not the Gog and Magog of the North, but a counter type of them.

Mede supposes them to be the Turks, in which, perhaps, he includes in general the Mahometan powers; and referring to the prophets alluded to in Ex. 38:17, he thinks the following passages are meant, viz. Is. 97:1, with the two last verses of the 9th chapter; Jer. 20:29, 34. Jo. 3:1, &c. Mi. 5:5, 9, 15; in all which places mention is made of some terrible enemy who should come against Israel, at the time of their return, whom the Lord should destroy with a hideous and dreadful slaughter. Newcome is of opinion, that the predictions of the prophets on this subject, referred to by Ezekiel, were never committed to writing, or are now lost.

Mede also thinks that Gog is the power meant by Mirah under the name of the Assyrian, not as though this were his original nation, but as the province from whence he should invade the land of Israel.

Lowman considers these nations of Gog and Magog to be a very proper figurative description of the enemies of true religion, and its faithful professors.

Pyle supposes them to mean remote heathen nations, prompted by envy and desire of plunder, who shall be permitted to invade the Christian territories in vast bodies and armies.

Shuckford thinks that the country round Aleppo is the land of Magog, once called Hierapolis, but more anciently Magog, as Pliny asserts, and Maimonides in Halicothherumoth, c. 1, § 9, and that the lands of Meshech and Tubal were adjacent to it. See Pe. Newton on the Prophecies, vol. ii. p. 347, and Daubuz, p. 574.

GOLD is the symbol of the great value, the duration, the incorruptibility, and the strength of the subject to which it is applied.

Thus, Is. 13:12,

'I will make a man more precious than fine gold,
Yes, a man than the richest ore of Ophir.'

La. 4:2,

'The precious sons of Zion, of worth equal to the purest gold,
How are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the manure of the potter!'

So in 2 Ti. 2:20, vessels of gold, as being precious, are opposed to vessels of wood and earth.

Riches are the strength of a man. Pr. 18:11,

'The rich man's wealth is his strong city,
And as a high wall about his habitation.'

For power and riches go together, and are akin in the way of the world. And hence gold symbolically signifies power, as well as riches.

Agreeably to this, the Phenicians represented their gods with purses of gold, as the symbol of their power. Suidas, v. Εμψυ. Thus, also, potens is rich, Quint. Inst. b. 6, c. 3, and impotens is poverty. Terence, Act. 4, sc. 3.

Gold denotes spiritually the redeeming merits of Christ. Re. 3:18, 'I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich.' Though others interpret it of being rich in good works before God.

In 1 Co. 3:12, it seems to denote sincere believers, built into the Christian church, who will stand the fiery trial.

Jb. 32:19,

'Will he esteem thy riches?
Not gold, nor all the forces of strength.'

Or rather, as Durell renders it,

'Not gold, nor all the powers of wealth.'

Da. 2:38, 'Thou art this head of gold.'

The Babylonian empire is so called, on account of its great riches; and Babylon was called by Isaiah, as in our version, 'the golden city,' 14:4; but more properly, 'the exactress of gold.'

Ec. 12:6, 'or the golden bowl be broken.'

Some explain this of the human head or skull, which resembles a bowl in form.

Re. 4:4, 'the elders,' and 9:7, 'the locusts, had on their heads crowns of gold.'

In the costume of the East, a linen turban, with a gold ornament, was reckoned a crown of gold, and is so called in the language of Scripture, Le. 8:9. In the case of the Mahometan Arabs, who are, in all probability, here represented by locusts, they were accustomed to wear ornaments on their heads like crowns or mitres.

And the Romish or antichristian Babylon is accordingly described under the figure of a female, decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, Re. 17:4; and in Re. 18:16, the city, or mystical Babylon, is represented by the same terms.

Re. 14:14, 'having on his head a golden crown.'

The ensign of royalty and sovereign power is here applied to Jesus Christ.

GRAPES. Independently of their literal meaning, it is plain, from more than one passage of Scripture, that they are used in a figurative sense. As, for instance, in Re. 14:18, 'Gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe;' i. e. the appointed time for the execution of divine vengeance is come, and the iniquities of the inhabitants of the earth have made them fully ripe for destruction.

In Mi. 7:1, it is also used figuratively, as well expressed by Newcome in his note on the place: 'As the early fig of excellent flavor cannot be found in the advanced season of summer, or the choice cluster of grapes after vintage; so neither can the good and upright man be discovered by diligent searching in Israel. This comparison is beautifully implied.'

So, in Jer. 6:9,

'They shall thoroughly glean as a vine the relics of Israel.
Turn again thine hand, like a grape-gatherer, unto the balaists.'

an address to the Chaldeans, exhorting them to return and pick up those few inhabitants that were left before, like the grape-gleanings, and to carry them also into captivity. The Chaldeans did so, as may be seen, 32:28, 29, 30.

And in Jer. 49:9, the meaning is, that when the enemy came to spoil, they should meet with no interruption, but should glean quite clean, and leave nothing behind through haste. See Blayne.

Ex. 18:2, 'The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge.' A proverbial expression, explained by the Chaldees, 'The fathers have sinned, and the sons are smitten.' In the second commandment, it is expressly declared, that the children should be punished in this life for the idolatry of the fathers. Idolatry was high-treason while the theocracy subsisted, and was to be restrained by the severest sanctions, under a dispensation appointed for these, among other wise purposes, to preserve the Israelites from the general taint of idolatry, and to maintain and propagate the knowledge of the one God. The general principle of the law cannot be better explained than in the words of Cicero, Ep. ad Brutum, 19, — 'Hoc præclare legibus comparatum est, ut caritas liberorum amicos parentes reipublice redderet.'

In the destruction by the Babylonians, the good were to escape, Ex. 9:4, 6; but they were only to deliver themselves, 14:14, 20, 21. Whenever the children had suffered temporal evils for the idolatry of their fathers, they had justly incurred a punishment solemnly denounced. With respect to the impending calamity from Nebuchadnezzar, God's purpose was to observe another rule of conduct. Newcome.

GRASS. As grass signifies princes, nobles, and rich men, so, by the rule of analogy, grass must signify the common people.

And in Scripture, men are compared to grass, as in 1 Pe. 1:24. Is. 40:6, 7.

In 1 Co. 3:12, hay or grass is applied figuratively to persons.

Re. 8:7, 'And all green grass was burnt up;' descriptive of the effects of those calamities which fell upon the Roman empire, by which the lower orders (the grass) suffered, as well as the higher orders (the trees).

Re. 9:4, 'that they should not hurt the grass of the earth.'

The natural locusts hurt every green thing, and prey upon it as their food; but these figurative locusts were under restrictions. It is generally explained of the rise of the Mahometan power; and it is very singular, that Abubeker gave orders 'not to destroy palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn, and to cut down no fruit-trees;' which seems to identify the Saracens with these myrtle locusts.

See Ockley's History of the Saracens.

H.

HAIL is the symbol of the divine vengeance upon kingdoms and nations, the enemies of God and of his people. And as a hail-storm is generally accompanied by lightning, and seems to be produced by a certain electrical state of the atmosphere, so we find in Scripture hail and fire, i. e. lightning, mentioned together.

Thus, in Ex. 9:23, 'And the Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along the ground, and the Lord rained hail upon the land of Egypt.'

Jb. 38:22, 23,

'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow,
Or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail,
Which I have reserved against the day of trouble,
Against the day of battle and war?'

Ps. 105:32, referring to God's plagues on Egypt,

'He gave them hail for rain,
And flaming fire in their land.'

Ps. 78:48, treating of the same subject, has,

'He gave up their cattle also to the hail,
And their flocks to hot thunderbolts.'

Ps. 148:8, they are linked together thus —

'Fire and hail, and snow, and vapor,
Stormy wind, fulfilling his word.'

And the like in Ps. 18:13,

'The Lord also thundered in the heavens,
And the Most High gave forth his voice,
Hailstones and coals of fire.'

In Is. 38:2, a passage relating to the Israelites, and which denounces their approaching destruction by Shalmaneser, the same images are employed. Hail is mentioned as a divine judgment by the prophet Haggai, 2:17. The destruction of the Assyrian army is thus pointed out in Is. 30:30,

'And Jehovah shall cause his glorious voice to be heard,
And the lightning down of his arm to be seen,
With wrath indignation, and a flame of consuming fire,
With a violent storm, and rushing showers, and hailstones.'

Ezekiel, 13:11, represents the wall dashed with untempered mortar, as being destroyed by great hailstones. And in his prophecy against Gog, he thus expresses himself, 32:22,

'And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood,
And with an overflowing shower and great hailstones,
Fire and brimstone will I rain upon him.'

a prediction which probably remains to be accomplished on the future enemies of the Jews, Gog and Magog, Re. 20:9, when his people are reinstated in God's favor, of which assurance it is there said, 'And fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them.'

The hail and fire mingled with blood, mentioned in Re. 8:7, are supposed to denote the commotions that took place in the Roman empire during the reigns of Jovian, Valentinian, Valens, and Gratian, during which the empire suffered great calamities, and many bloody battles took place from the year 363 to 379. Claudius has well expressed the misery of those times, to his son Honorius, as quoted by Lowman,

'On such afflictive, et vel leuissimis letis,
Vel prope castris, arsis tot flamma columnis,
Redditi sacrum in Capitolium Colonus
Reddidi, et Ledt rapui de sanctissimis arvis,
Nella relictis, Romam nonam urbem,
Ni Pater hic tuos, Januam reitum aduast Poderat,' &c.

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton, that 'in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens and clouds politic.'

In reference to the period, supposed to be predicted in Re. 8:7, Philostorgius, after mentioning numerous calamities which men were exposed to, adds, — 'Also there were inundations of rain waters, and in some places flashes of flames, and sometimes whirlwinds of fire, which produced various and intolerable tempests. Yes, and hail bigger than a man's fist, or greater than a man could hold in his hand, did fall in many places, weighing as far as eight pounds.'

The great hail, in Re. 11:19, denotes great and heavy judgments on the enemies of true religion; and the grievous storm, in 16:21, represents something similar, probably still more terrible, and far more severe.

The Hebrew term for hailstone, aleph, from gobah, a gem or crystal, with the Arabic article prefixed, i. e. hailstones of gems, or hailstones as large as gems, is thought by Parkhurst to refer to some idolatrous sects the Jews entertained about Ash. 'It is certain,' he says, 'that the latter heathens attributed the sending of Ash to their Jupiter, and looked upon any remarkable showers of it as proofs of his anger.' So Horace, Ode 3, lib. 1.

'Jam caeth terris nix, aque diem Grandinis miserit Pater,' &c.

'Too long, alas, with storms of hail and snow,
Jove has checked the world below.'

Idem.

Comp. Virgil, Æn. 4, lin. 159, 161; Æn. 9, lin. 669, and Livy, b. 2, cap. 62, and b. 9, cap. 11. Spence, in his Polymetia, gives us a medal, on which Jupiter Pluvius, or the Rain, is represented seated on the clouds, holding in his right hand, and pouring a stream of hail and rain from it upon the earth, whilst his fulmen is held down in his left.

According to Acmet and the interpreters of dreams, hail, snow, and the like, portend anxieties and torments, or some sudden attack of an enemy. And when the hail figure destroys heaps of corn or barley, there hostile invasions and slaughter may be expected.

Pindar and Demosthenes apply it to a like purpose; the latter of whom compares the progress of king Philip to a storm of hail.

Is. 32:19, is thus rendered by Lowth —

'But the hail shall fall, and the snow be brought down,
And the city shall be laid level with the plain.'

The city, says the bishop, is probably Nineveh or Babylon; but this verse is very obscure. Ephraim Syrus supposes the forest to be the kingdom of the Assyrians, and the city, the ensive camps. And so conjectured Archbishop Secker, referring to Zch. 11:3. Classius thinks that the world in general is described; the prophet by forest and city naming the unsullied and the habitable parts; that, while it should tremble and shake under calamities, the godly should be preserved on them all.

HAIR. White hair, or the hoary head, is a symbol of the respect due to age. Le. 12:22,

'Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, And honor the face of the old man.'

And Solomon says, Pr. 16:31,

'The hoary head is a crown of glory, If it be found in the way of righteousness.'

Hence we find in Da. 7:9, God takes upon him the title of 'Ancient of Days.' The hoary head is the symbol of authority and honor. All the interpreters agree in this.

The shaving of the head, on the contrary, signifies affliction, poverty, and disgrace. Thus, Is. 7:20, 'The shaving of the head, the hair of the feet, and the beard, by a hired razor,' the king of Assyria, denotes the troubles, slaughter, and destruction to be brought upon the Jews by the Assyrian armies. 'The hairs of the head, are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or the lower parts, are the common people; the beard is the king, the high-priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The Eastern people have always held in beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honor. To pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be afforded. See Louth in loc. Hence, also, in Jer. 47:5, baldness is destruction.

Is. 15:2, 'On every head there is baldness, and every beard is shorn.'

Herodotus, ii. 36, speaks of it as a general practice among all men, except the Egyptians, who cut off their hair as a token of mourning. Cut off thy hair, and cast it away,' says Jeremiah, 7:29, 'and take up a lamentation.'

And Homer, in his Odyssey, 4, 197, as translated by Pope,

*'The rites of woe
Are all, alas, the living can bestow;
O'er the consoling dust enjoined to shed
The grateful curl, and drop the tender tear.'*

A Nazirite was one who, by a special vow, had separated himself, or set himself apart for a time, from all worldly connections, to attend upon the service of God only. Nu. 6:2. Under these circumstances he was to let the hair of his head grow, verse 5; and when the days of his vow were fulfilled, he was then to shave his head at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, verse 18, in a solemn and public manner, to notify that he was no longer in his former state of separation.

Forster, in his Observations, p. 560, speaks of the hair cut off and thrown upon the bier, at Otaheite; and at the Friendly Islands, it is expressly said, that cutting off the hair is one of their mourning ceremonies. Cook's Voyage, vol. i. p. 119. This was forbidden by the Mosaic law, as well as cutting the flesh, at the same time, and on the same principles. The hair is the natural ornament of the head, and the loss of it a considerable defect in the human figure. It was therefore not to be voluntarily assumed by those whose profession obliged them to 'worship Jehovah in the beauty of holiness.' At what time the observance of the law in these particulars began to be relaxed does not appear; but there are no traces of such customs among God's chosen people earlier than those which are alluded to in the prophetic books, properly so called. See Blayney.

'Hairs, as the hair of women.' Ec. 9:8. This is part of the description of the apocalyptic locusts; it may either denote the greatness, length, and fineness of the hair, the symbol of honor and authority; or else, that the hair is treasured up and plaited after the manner of women, as was the way of the Saracens. And therefore those of the sect of Alli, to distinguish themselves, had not only a turban made after a particular fashion, but they also twisted their hair after a manner quite different from the rest of the Muslimans. Herbelot, title Al.

Dressing the hair in this manner, is the symbol of luxury and effeminacy; and therefore it is forbidden to Christian women, as being the practice of the heathens, and the dress of harlots, in 1 Pe. 3:3, 1 Ti. 2:9.

And not only in women, but more particularly in men, is the said practice condemned in holy writ, as in 1 Co. 11:14, where the word scap signifies hair studiously dressed, as women are wont to do with theirs.

Persius, Sat. 4, l. 1, calls Socrates barbatus maculifer. Philosophers were so styled by way of honor and distinction; for cutting off the beard was a punishment and a mark of disgrace, as we learn from the 13th book of Athenæus.

HAND. Hands are the symbols of human action; pure hands are pure actions; unjust hands are deeds of injustice; hands full of blood, actions stained with cruelty, and the like. Ps. 90:17, Jb. 9:30, 1 Ti. 2:8, Is. 1:15.

And so Herodian, describing a homicide, calls him 'a man of impure hands,' lib. 1.

And Seneca, Herc. Jur. act. 5, says, 'Nul-lum mare, nulla flumina dextram abluere posse scelere sanguine contaminatam.'

Euripides, in Orest. says, 'dyvos yap epe Xetpas,' for I am of pure hands.

Washing of the hands was the symbol of innocence. Ps. 26:6,

*'I will wash my hand in innocence,
And I will encompass thee altar, Jehovah.'*

Ps. 73:13,

*'I have purified my heart in vain,
And washed my hands in innocence.'*

Of this Pilate furnishes an example, Mat. 27:24, where, taking water, he washes his hands, and says, 'I am innocent of the blood of this just man; see ye to it.'

Washing the hands was used as a symbol of initiation. Hence Ordo says, Pastl, lib. 4,

*'Tu convertis ad aras,
Dic quæter et vivo perire roe manus.'*

And Prudentius,

*'De ore fontano alibum
Manus et os et lumina,
Pateque fac accurritum.'*

Litovius observes, that the ruins of a temple are found in Crete, on the door of which is this inscription—

'Cleanse your feet, wash your hands, and then enter.'

To such rites, perhaps, the Saviour alludes, Jn. 3:5, 'Verily, verily I say unto you, Unless a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.' And Paul, in He. 10:23, 'Let us draw near,' &c., having our body cleansed with pure water.' And Ja. 4:8, 'Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you; cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded.'

Washing of hands was a symbol of expiation, as might be shown by numerous references; and of sanctification, as appears from several passages. 1 Co. 6:11, Is. 1:16, Ps. 24:3,4. For all the ablutions of the Old Testament prefigured nothing else than the sanctification of the church of God, and hence, Ep. 5:26, it is said, 'Christ gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word,' &c. And Paul, in 1 Ti. 2:8, says, 'I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands,' &c. See Jb. 11:13,14.

It was the custom of the Jews to wash their hands before and after meat. See Mk. 7:3. Mat. 6:2, Lu. 11:38. A Jewish author writes thus: 'He who wishes to eat food, for the sake of which prayer is to be said, let him pour water on his hands, although he is conscious of no impurity in them, and at the same time let him recite the customary benediction on pouring the water on his hands.'

Plautus mentions the custom, in Pers. act. 1, sc. 5,

*'Hoc age, accombe,
Date aquam manibus, apparte manum.'*

The object of these ceremonies was to recall to the mind that all gifts for the sustenance of the body proceed from God, and are to be received with a pure and holy mind, as Paul teaches, 1 Co. 10:31, 'Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God.' And in 2 Co. 7:1, 'Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' And what water effects outwardly, the blood of Christ is said to effect inwardly, 'purging the conscience from dead works.' He. 9:13,14. And as unclean persons are not admitted into the company of their superiors, so it is said, 'Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.' He. 12:14. 'He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as God is pure.' 1 Jn. 3:3.

Hand, in general, is the symbol of power and strength; and the right hand more particularly so.

To hold by the right hand, is the symbol of protection and favor. Ps. 18:35.

The expression in Mk. 16:19, 'He sat at the right hand of God,' is equivalent to the expression in Mk. 14:63, 'He sat at the right hand of Power;' meaning that divine power and authority are communicated to Christ.

So the right hand of fellowship, Ga. 2:9, signifies a communication of the same power and authority.

To give the hand, as to a master, is the token of submission and future obedience. Thus in 2 Ch. 30:8, the words in the original, 'Give the hand unto the Lord,' signify, yield yourselves unto the Lord. The like phrase is used in Ps. 68:31, La. 5:6.

And thus in Horace, Epod. 17, to give hands, is to submit, or to yield one's self a slave, as it is explained by the commentator.

To lift up the right hand to heaven, was the sign used in swearing. Go 14:22, Ex. 6:8, Nu. 14:30, De. 32:40, Ez. 20:5,6, Da. 12:7.

Marks in the hands or wrists were the tokens of servitude; the heathens being wont to imprint marks upon the hands of servants, and on such as devoted themselves to some false deity. Thus, in Zch. 13:6, 'One shall say to him,

*'What are these marks (or punctures) in thine hands?
And he shall say,*

Those with which I have been stricken in the house of my friends.'

The man, when challenged for the scars visible on his hands, would deny them to have proceeded from an idolatrous cause, and pretend that they were the effects of the wounds he had given himself for the loss of his friends.

The right hand stretched out, is the symbol of immediate exertion of power. Ex. 15:12.

The right hand, or the hands laid upon a person, are the symbol of a conveyance or transmission of blessings, strength, and power, or authority. Ge. 48:14-20, Da. 10:10, Nu. 27:18. God was wont to give this honor to his prophets, or to bestow his gifts upon others at their prayers, of which imposition of hands was a symbol. So Moses laid his hands on Joshua, Nu. 27:18. Naaman joins calling on God's name with laying on of hands, 2 K. 5:11. Calvin says, 'Let us remember that the laying on of hands was the instrument of God, at the time when he gave the visible graces of his Spirit to his people. But since the church has been deprived of such riches, to wit, the visible graces of his Spirit, laying on of hands would be but an unprofitable image.'

The hand of God upon a prophet, signifies the immediate operation of his Holy Spirit on the soul or body of the prophet, as in 1 K. 18:46, 2 K. 3:15, Ez. 1:3, 3:22, 8:1. And as the hand, so also the finger of God denotes this power or spirit. See Lu. 11:20, and compare Mat. 12:28. Thus our Saviour cast out devils or demons by his bare command; whereas the Jews cast them out only by the invocation of the name of God. And so in Ex. 8:19, the finger of God is a work which none but God could perform.

And thus the expression in Ex. 31:18, of the two tables being written with the finger of God, seems to denote that letters were then first given; that the giving of them was a work of God's design and contrivance, so proper to Him as not to be done by any other. The invention of expressing articulate sounds by characters, seemed to exceed the reach of human wit; language and writing must both have been of divine suggestion. Eupolemus says, that Moses was the first wise man who taught the art of grammar or writing to the Jews, that the Phœnicians received it from them, and the Greeks from the Phœnicians.

HARP. Harps or guitars are constantly, in the Holy Scriptures, instruments of joy. They are mentioned in very ancient times as musical instruments, used both by Jews and Gentiles; and their employment in the temple worship frequently occurs. Moses has named their original inventor in Ge. 4:21, viz. Jubal; and in Ge. 31:27, Laban says to Jacob, 'Why did you not tell me that I might have sent you away with mirth and songs, with tabret and with harp?' And in that very ancient writing, the book of Job, 21:12, that patriarch, speaking of the prosperity of the wicked, says, 'They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.' And when complaining of his own condition, 30:31, he says, 'My harp also is turned into mourning, and my organ to the voice of them that weep.' Isaiah speaks of the harp under the same character, as an instrument of joy, 24:8,

*'The joyful sound of the tabour ceaseth;
The noise of exultation is no more;
The joyful sound of the harp ceaseth.'*

Divine subjects used to be brought forward with the accompaniments of the harp. Thus, Ps. 45:5,

*'I will incline mine ear to a parable;
I will open my dark saying upon the harp.'*

And that the high praises of God were so celebrated, there are numerous testimonies. Ps. 33:2,

'Praise Jehovah with the harp.'

Ps. 63:4,

'On the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God.'

Ps. 57:8,

*'Awake up, my glory; awake, psaltery and harp;
I myself will awake early.'*

See also Ps. 71:22,23, 92:4,5,6, 98:5, 147:7, 150:3.

That harps are used to celebrate the praises of heroes, is well known.

Thus Homer, Iliad 9th,

*'Amused at ease, the godlike men they found,
Pleased with the solemn harp's strains, as when
The well-wrought harp from conquered Thebes came,
Of polished silver was its costly frame;
With this he soothes his angry soul, and sings
Th' immortal deeds of heroes and of kings.'* Pope.

And Ammianus Marcellinus says, 'Bardi quidem fortis virorum illustrium facta heroica composita versibus cum dulcibus lyre modulis cantantur.' And hence the harp is put by Propertius for singing and celebrations, b. 3, El. 10.

* Nunc volo subducto graviore procedere valis,
Nunc citharæ citharæ non mea Musa docet.

Harpes, in Solomon's day, were made of the almag-tree, as our translators have it, 1 K. 10: 11, 12, which appears to have been ebony, brought from India, as Ewaldus observes; but Josephus calls it the pitch or torch-tree. They were often gilded, and hence called golden harpe, Re. 5:8. So Virgil, Æn. 1.

* Citharæ citharæ Jopas Personat auris.

Theocritus, in Idyll, speaks of harpe of doxæ, and Aristophanes of ivory harpe. Lucian describes the form of the ancient harp, in his dialogues of the gods: 'Mercury found a tortoise-shell somewhere, which he formed into an instrument, adapting pine to it, and laying bars, then fixing reeds, and covering it over, and applying to it cithara strings, he made most exquisite harmony.' χελύνην περὶ πινυῖν, κ. τ. λ. Harps of eight strings are mentioned, 1 Ch. 15:21; called in our version, 'harps on the Sheminith.' But amongst the Greeks, it had for most part seven strings. Thus Euripides, in Ion, v. 881, 'O thou who sweetly playest on the seven-stringed harp.' Josephus, Antiq. b. 7, c. 12, describes a harp of ten strings. The distinct sounds uttered by these strings or chords, are alluded to by Paul, in 1 Co. 14:7. Its soothing effect was exemplified in calming down the furious spirit of Saul, 1 S. 16:17, 24. 18:9. 19:9. The spirit of prophecy appears to have been excited by instrumental music of this kind, 2 K. 3:15. Harpers held the instrument in the hand, or placed it on a pillar, or sat down by a river side, whence Ovid Fasti, b. 2, v. 113,

* Ille citharæ citharæ tenet, pendentes rehendi
Cassat, et æquoreæ carminis molles equat.

Sometimes they suspended them from trees, to which there is an allusion in Ps. 137:1, 2,

* By the rivers of Babylon we sat and wept,
When we remembered Zion:
On the willows in the midst of it we hanged our harps.

The harp was used in processions and public triumphs, in worship and the offices of religion, and was sometimes accompanied with dancing. See Ps. 149:3. Euripides also joins the harp and the dance together, Iphig. v. 1037, and Homer, Odys. b. 8, and Theognis, &c.

They were also used after successful battles; see 2 Ch. 20:28. 1 Mac. 13:51. Isaiah alludes to this custom, 30:32,

* Whenever the roll of correction shall pass,
Which Jehovah shall lay heavily upon thee,
It shall be accompanied with tabors and harps,
And with fierce battles shall He fight against them;

i. e., as Lowth observes, 'With every demonstration of joy and thanksgiving, for the destruction of the enemy in so wonderful a manner; with hymns of praise, accompanied with musical instruments.' See verse 20. So, in the victory of the Lamb, Re. 14:1, 2, 'I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps'; — the church in heaven being represented as composing a grand chorus, in celebration of the triumphs of the Redeemer.

The heathen had the same customs, as appears from many authors, and Bellerger de Triumphis, cap. 30, 'Prestant triumphanti Imperatori victores, tunicæ punicis amicti, chorus citharistarum et Satornorum Hetruscæ pompæ ritu cinctorum, ornamentumque coronis aureis.'

At solemn feasts, and especially of the nuptial kind, harps were employed. To this the prophet Isaiah alludes, 5:11, 12, where he says,

* Woe to them that rise early in the morning, to follow strong drink;

Who sit late in the evening, that wine may inflame them;
And the lyre and the harp, the viol and the pipe,
And wine are their entertainments;
But the work of Jehovah they regard not,
And the operation of his hands they do not perceive.

Homer mentions the custom, in Iliad 24, and Odyssey, b. 21.

That harps were used in worship, has been already adverted to, and that the heathen employed them on such occasions appears from Da. 3:5, 7, 15. Virgil refers to the custom in Æn. b. 6,

* Nec non Thrice lona cum vestis sacerdos, &c.

* The Thracian bard, surrounded by the real,
There stands conspicuous in his flowing red;
His flying fingers and harmonious quill
Strike cease distinguished notes, and even at once they dry.

Also Theognis, in Sentent. v. 758, φάρμυξ αὐθιγγυῖς κ. τ. λ. 'Again the harp or pipe sounds forth a sacred melody, while we appease the gods with libations.'

Bochart observes, vol. 1, p. 729, it is probable that the Greeks used the harp chiefly on mournful occasions, whereas, among the Hebrews, playing on the harp was a sign of joy.

But, on examining the Greek writers, this remark does not appear to be well founded, for the harp is found to have been employed similarly among both nations; and Rochast rests his observations chiefly on the term strapa, as referring to lamentation.

Ammonius makes a distinction between κitharistes and κitharodes. The former is one who only plays; the latter, one who both sings and plays. It is the latter term which is used in Re. 14:9, 18:32.

'Harps of God,' Re. 15:2, are either a Hebraism to show their excellence, as the addition of God often signifies, (the most excellent things in their kind being in the Scriptures said to be of God,) as, a prince of God, Ec. 23:6 in the original; the mountains of God, Ps. 36:6, in the original; cedars of God, Ps. 80:11, orig.; and the like.

Or else they mean, harps given as from God. Or, harps of God may be harps used in the service of God, in opposition to harps common and profane. 1 Ch. 16:42. 2 Ch. 7:6.

HARVEST is put for a time of destruction, Ho. 6:11, according to Newcome; but, according to Horsley, for a time of mercy. 'Observe,' says he, 'that the vintage is always an image of the season of judgment; but the harvest, of the ingathering of the objects of God's final mercy.' To reconcile these two opposite views, we have only to attend to the definition of harvest given by Mede. 'The harvest,' says Mede, 'includes three things, — the reaping, the gathering in, and the grinding; from whence it generally has a twofold meaning in parabolic writings, — that of slaughter and destruction, equivalent to reaping and grinding; that of restoration and safety, under the image of gathering in.' Of this there is an example in Jer. 51:33,

* The daughter of Babylon is as a threshing-floor,
The time of her threshing, yet a little while,
And the time of her harvest is come.

plainly referring to the judgments of God upon Babylon.

So in the oracle concerning Damascus, Is. 17:5, it is said,

* It shall be as when one gathereth the standing harvest,
And his arm wrapeth the ears of corn,
Or as when one gleaneth ears in the valley of Rephaim;

i. e., as Lowth observes, the king of Assyria shall sweep away the whole body of the people, as the reaper strippeth off the whole crop of corn, and the remnant shall be no more in proportion than the scattered ears left to the gleaner.

Jo. 3:13,

* Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe;
Come, get ye down, for the wine-press is full, the vats overflow,
For their wickedness is great.

These last words explain the figurative language which precedes. They are ripe for excision. The Chaldee paraphrases this passage well, thus:

* Draw out the sword against them; the fane of their end is come;
Tread upon their mighty men slain, as men tread upon what is in the wine-press;
Shed their blood, because their wickedness is multiplied.

The same comparison is used in Re. 14:14, 15:1, where the person referred to as executing vengeance is Jesus Christ Himself, though angels assist in the execution, to show, as Lowman notes, that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of a divine hand. It is executed on orders brought by an angel from the temple, or presence of God, from the temple which is in heaven, v. 17.

The harvest, in agricultural reckoning, is considered to be the end of the season, being the time appointed for gathering in the fruits of the earth, and finishing the labors of the year. So, in Mat. 13:39, our Lord says, 'The harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels.'

In Mat. 9:36, our Lord, seeing multitudes coming to hear Him, remarks, 'The harvest truly is plenteous; i. e., many are willing to receive instruction. This was spoken at the feast of tabernacles, which was in harvest.

Homer, Il. A. v. 67, compares men falling thick in battle, to corn falling in ranks, in the harvest. And the Indian Interpreter says, 'If a king dreams that he sees harvest reaped in his own country, he will soon hear of a slaughter of his people.'

The metaphor of mowing or reaping is used, in most authors, to signify an excision or utter destruction of the subject. So Horace and Virgil have used it; Hor. b. 4, od. 14; En. b. 10, v. 513. And in Homer, mowing is a symbol of war; the straw signifies the slain, and the crop or corn, those that escape. Il. r. v. 221.

But harvest is also used in a good sense; as in Mat. 9:37, Lu. 10:2, Jn. 4:35.

And so in Jer. 8:20, 'The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved; i. e., the time in which we expected to be saved, is past.

HATE. See under LOVE.

HEAD, in general, as being the governing part of man, always implies rule; and therefore the symbols about the head must show the qualities and extent of the power to rule.

The head of a people, signifies their king or chief governor.

The heads of a people, their princes or magistrates.

To have a great head, portends principality and empire.

For the hair of the head, see HAIR.

Christ is called the head over all things to the church. Ep. 1:23, &c. The apostle, in this passage, seems to have respect to the famous statue of Diana, who was the great goddess of these Ephesians. Her image was that of a woman, and her body covered or filled with the breasts of a woman, to denote, as Jerome tells us, 'that she was the nurse, supporter, and life of all living creatures; i. e., or, as Macrobius informs us, Saturn. b. 1, c. 20, 'she represented the earth or nature, by whose nourishment the whole universe is supported.' Now, this gives a beautiful turn to the apostle's expression. The church of Christ is that body, that σλαμπε, or fulness, which He upholds and enriches by his bounty. Diana was esteemed the nurse of all things, and her many breasts denoted her various methods and sources by which she conveyed her nourishment to the universe; such a one, the apostle tells the Ephesians, Christ really was, for He fillets all things with all things. He fillets the church and all its members with a bountiful and rich variety of blessings; hence John, who lived long at Ephesus, uses the same manner of expression, Jn. 1:16, 'And from his fulness we have all received grace for grace; i. e., of every grace or celestial gift, conferred above measure upon Him, his disciples have received a portion, according to their measure.' See Chandler on Ephesians; Ewald on the same.

HEAT. In Is. 49:10, and Re. 7:16, there is a reference to the burning wind of the desert, the simoon or samiel, described by travellers as exceedingly pestilential and fatal. It is highly probable that this was the instrument with which God destroyed the army of Sennacherib. 2 K. 19:35. Its effects are evidently alluded to in Ps. 103:15, 16, and in Jer. 4:11. Thevenot mentions such a wind, which, in 1658, suffocated 30,000 men in one night, and another which, in 1655, suffocated 4000 persons. It sometimes burns up the corn, when near its maturity, and hence the image of corn blasted before it be grown up, used in 2 K. 19:26. Its effect is not only to render the air extremely hot and scorching, but to fill it with poisonous and suffocating vapors. The most violent storms that Judea was subject to, came from the deserts of Arabia. 'Out of the south cometh the whirlwind,' says Job, 37:9. 'And there came a great wind from the wilderness,' Jb. 1:19.

Zch. 9:14,

* And Jehovah shall appear over them,
And his arrow shall go forth as the lightning;
And the Lord Jehovah shall sound the trumpet,
And shall march in the whirlwinds of the south.

The 91st Psalm, which speaks of divine protection, describes the plague as arrows, and in those winds there are observed flames of fire. And therefore, in Nu. 13:3, the place in which the plague was inflicted, is for that reason called Zahrah, i. e., a burning. A plague is called זֶרַח, zeker, as a desert is called zacher, because those winds came from the desert, and are real plagues.

This hot wind, when used as a symbol, signifies the fire of persecution, or else some prodigious wars which destroy men. For zeker signifies war; and scorching heat signifies persecution and destruction.

So in Mat. 13:62, and Lu. 8:13, heat is tribulation, temptation, or persecution; and in 1 Pe. 4:12, burning tends to temptation.

A gentle heat of the sun, according to the Oriental interpreters, signifies the favor and bounty of the prince; but great heat denotes punishment.

Hence the burning of the beavers, is a potent expiation in Livy, b. 3, c. 5, of slaughter. And thus in Ps. 121:6,

* The sun shall not smite thee by day,
Nor the moon by night;

is in the next place explained thus:

* Jehovah shall preserve thee from all evil;
He shall preserve thy soul.

HEAVEN. There is, says Daubuz, a threefold world, and therefore a threefold heaven — the invisible, the visible, and the political, among men; which last may be either civil or ecclesiastical.

Wherever the scens is laid, heaven signifies symbolically the ruling power or government; that is, the whole assembly of the ruling powers, which, in respect of the subjects or earth, are a political heaven, being over and ruling the subjects, as the natural heaven stands over and rules the earth.

So that, according to the subject, is the term to be limited; and therefore Artemidorus, writing in the times of the Roman emperors, makes Italy to be the heaven: 'As heaven,' says he, 'is the abode of gods, so is Italy of kings.'

The Chinese call their monarch Tien, the son of heaven, meaning thereby the most powerful monarch. And thus, in Mat. 24:30, leaves is synonymous to powers and glory; and when Jesus says, 'The powers of the heaven shall be shaken,' it is easy to conceive that He meant that the kingdoms of the world should be overthrown to submit to his kingdom.

Any government is a world; and therefore in Is. 51:15,16, heaven and earth signify a political universe, a kingdom or polity. And in 5:17, a new heaven and a new earth, signify a new government, new kingdom, new people. See under HEAVEN AND EARTH.

A door opened in heaven, is the beginning of a new kind of government.

To ascend up into heaven, signifies to be in all power to obtain rule and dominion. And thus is the symbol to be understood in Is. 14:3,14, where the king of Babylon says,

'I will ascend into heaven;
'I will exalt my throne above the stars of God.'

To descend from heaven, signifies, symbolically, to act by a commission from heaven. And thus our Savior uses the word 'descending,' Jn. 1:51, in speaking of the angels' acting by divine commission, at the command of the Son of man.

To fall from heaven, signifies to lose power and authority, to be deprived of the power to govern, to revolt or apostatize.

The heaven opened. The natural heaven, being the symbol of the governing part of the political world, a new face in the natural, represents a new face in the political.

Or, the heaven may be said to be opened when the day appears, and consequently shut when night comes on, as appears from Virgil, En. b. 10, v. 1, 'The gates of heaven unfold,' &c. And thus the Scripture, in a poetical manner, speaks of the doors of heaven, Ps. 13:3; of the heaven being shut, 1 K. 8:35; and in Ex. 1:1, the heaven is said to be opened.

Midst of heaven may be the air, or the middle station between the corrupted earth and the throne of God in heaven. And in this sense, he air is the proper place where God's threatenings and judgments should be denounced. Thus, in 1 Ch. 21:16, it is said that David saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven, as he was just going to destroy Jerusalem with the pestilence. The angel's hovering there, was to show that there was room to pray for mercy, just as God was going to inflict the punishment: it had not as yet done any execution.

HEAVEN AND EARTH. These, in the prophetic language, often signify the political state or condition of persons of different ranks in this present world.

The heaven of the political world is the sovereignty thereof, whose host and stars are its powers that rule; namely, kings, princes, peers, counsellors, magistrates; and this is perhaps what Sapor king of Persia meant, in his address to Constantius the emperor, where, speaking in the Oriental style, he calls himself king of kings, brother of the sun and moon, companion of the stars, &c.

The earth is the peasantry, plebeians, or common race of man, who possess no power, it are ruled by superiors.

Of such a heaven and earth, we may understand and mention to be made in Hag. 2:6,7,21,22, referred to in He. 12:26, meaning the political affairs and earth. Also, Jer. 4:23,24,

'I beheld the earth, and lo, disorder and confusion;
The heavens also, and there was no light.
I beheld the mountains, and lo, they trembled,
And all the hills shook;

if the world were returned to chaos again.
And in Is. 51:15,16,

Am Jehovah, thy God,
Who divided the sea, (i. e. the Red Sea,) when the waves thereof roared;

Jehovah God of hosts is his name:
And put my words (i. e. my law) in thy mouth,
And covered thee with the shadow of my hand, (i. e. protected thee in thy march to Canaan.)

at I might plant the Assesians, and lay the foundations of the earth (i. e. make thee a state, and build thee into a political world).
and say unto Sion, Thou art my people.'

See also Is. 34:2,4,5. Is. 13:10. Ez. 32:7. At. 24:29.

Such modes of speaking were usual in the Oriental poetry and philosophy, which made a heaven and earth in every thing, i. e. a superior and inferior in every part of nature; and we learn from Maimonides, quoted by Ede, who affirms that the Arabians in his time, when they would express that a man was fallen into some great calamity, used to say, 'His heaven has fallen to the earth;' meaning, his superiority or prosperity is much diminished.

To look for new heavens or a new earth,' 2 Pe. 3:13, then, may mean, to look for a new order of the present world, or, as the Scripture phrases it, Mat. 19:28. Ac. 3:21, 'The regeneration,' or the restitution of all things.'

HE-GOAT. Da. 8:5, 'And as I was considering, behold a he-goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes,' &c.

The Macedonians are called Ægeades, from Ayos, a goat; see Justin, b. 7; and from the same author we learn, that the goat, since their king Caranus, was the arms of Macedon.

Bishop Chandler, in his Vindication, p. 154, observes, 'That princes and nations being of old painted by their symbols, which Procopius calls πρωτογραφα, they came afterwards to be distinguished by writers with the names of their symbols, as by their proper appellations. Yet Alexander derived himself from Jupiter Ammon, and he and his successors had two rams' horns on their coins, the very description of the former beast. But this happened not till after he had subdued Egypt, when, being lord of Persia, he might adopt her arms or ensigns for his own.' Dr. Newton observes, that 'Alexander's son by Roxana was named Ægus, or the son of the goat, and that some of his successors are represented in their coins with goats' horns.'

'And touched not the ground,' denoting the rapidity of his conquests. But the Syrian renders it, 'Nothing touched or hindered him in the earth,' i. e. he met with no impediment or material obstruction.

The 'notable or conspicuous horn,' is Alexander himself, as explained by the angel, verse 21.

Verse 6, 'He came to the ram,' &c.; i. e. he encountered Darius.

Verse 9, the single or small horn is understood by some to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, whom Polybius calls Epimanes, or the Madman. But interpreters are by no means agreed on this subject.

See the articles HORN and LEOPARD.

The particulars which illustrate the fulfilment of this remarkable prophecy may be found at large in the following authors:—Arrian's Expedition of Alexander; Quintus Curtius; Diodorus Siculus; Plutarch's Life of Alexander. And amongst the moderns, Rollin's Ancient History; Frideaux's Connections; Mede's Works; Newton on the Prophecies; Wintle on Daniel; Spanheim on the Use of Coins, &c. &c.

HORN. Horns naturally stand for power, as the great strength of those animals, which possess them, is placed there. They were, on that account, anciently the hieroglyphical symbols of power, (see the Oneirocritics, c. 82, 83, et alia) for it has been justly observed, that hieroglyphics were a source of metaphors in the ancient Eastern languages. Thus, in Am. 6:13, where it is said,

'Ye that rejoice in a thing of nought,
That say, How we are not taken to ourselves dominion by our own strength'

Instead of 'strength,' the Hebrew has horns. So, in De. 33:17, horns are put for strength and power:

'His beauty shall be that of a young bull,
And his horns shall be the horns of a rhinoceros;
With these he shall push together the people to the extremities of the land.'

Such are the ten thousands of Ephraim;
Such the thousands of Manasseh!

See this blessing on the head of Joseph well illustrated in Jos. 17:14-18.

In 1 K. 22:11, we find a striking display of symbolical action on the part of the false prophet Zedekiah. He made him horns of iron, and said, 'Thus saith Jehovah, With these thou shalt push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.'

Jer. 48:25,

'The horn of Moab is cut off,
And his arm is broken, saith Jehovah;'

i. e. his strength is decayed, he is no longer formidable.

La. 2:3, the subdued and desolate state of the Jews is described by saying, 'He hath cut off in his fierce anger every horn of Israel.'

On the other hand, promises of encouragement are held out in such language as this: Mj. 4:13,

'Arise, and tread out the grain, O daughter of Sion;
Thine horn will I make iron,
And thine hoof will I make brass;
And thou shalt beat in pieces many people,
And thou shalt derive the pain from them to Jehovah,
And their substance to the Lord of the whole earth.'

This opinion of the strength of animals consisting in their horns, was held by profane writers, as by Aristotle, Hist. Anim. b. 4, c. 8;

Ælian, Hist. Anim. b. 16, c. 93. And we find Horace, b. 3, Ode 21, saying,

'Tu sperem reducis mentibus anxie, Virisque addis et cornua pauperi.'

i. e. thou restorest hope to anxious minds, and addest horns (meaning strength or confidence) to the poor.

Horns are attributed to Bacchus by Ovid, Metain. b. 4,

'Accedant capiti cornua, Bacchus eris.'

And Valerius Flaccus ascribes horns to rivers, on account of their rapid and irresistible course. Argon. b. 6, v. 618,

'Tunc et terrificis undantem cornibus Hebrum.'

Claudian also has,

'taurina levatur
Cornu temporibus riuces sudante rivas.'

And Spanheim, in his Treatise on Coins, mentions some, in which rivers appear with horns.

Horns were also the symbol of royal dignity and power; and when they are distinguished by number, they signify so many monarchies. Thus, horn signifies a monarchy, in Jer. 48:25, already quoted. And in 2 Ch. 1:18, &c., the four horns are the four great monarchies, which had each of them subdued the Jews. The ten horns, says Daniel, 7:24, are ten kings. The ten horns, spoken of in Re. 13:1, as having ten crowns upon them, no doubt signify the same thing, for so we have it interpreted in 17:12. The king of Persia is described by Ammianus Marcellinus as wearing golden rams' horns by way of diadem, b. 69, c. 1, 'Aureum capitis arietini fignmentum interstinctum lapillis pro diademate gessit.' And the effigy of Ptolemy with a ram's horn, as exhibited in ancient sculpture, is mentioned by Spanheim, Dissert. de Numism. Whence also the kings of Media and Persia are depicted by Daniel, 8:30, under the figure of a horned ram.

When it is said, in Da. 8:9, that out of one of the four notable horns came forth a little horn, we are to understand, that out of one of the four kingdoms, represented by the four horns, arose another kingdom, which became exceeding great. Some understand by this, Antiochus Epiphanes; others, one of the first Cæsars; and others refer it to the Turkish empire, and will have Egypt, Asia, and Greece, to be the three horns torn up or reduced by the Turk. But as Dr. Zouch observes, the kingdom possessed by Antiochus IV., surnamed Epiphanes, was that to which he legally succeeded by the death of his brother Seleucus Philopator, the son of Antiochus the Great. It was not a new or flth kingdom, arising out of any of the four kingdoms into which that of Alexander was rent. It was literally a continuation of that kingdom, which commenced in Syria soon after the death of Alexander. Antiochus Epiphanes was the 8th king of Syria. After him are enumerated no less than nineteen kings in regular succession, Antiochus XIII. being the last. If it be asked, What, then, is meant by the little horn? to give a definite reply would be presumptuous, after so much learned controversy on this subject. Suffice it to say, the more general opinion refers it to antichrist, or the Papal usurpator, St. Paul's 'man of sin,' See 2 Th. 2:9,10; and Re. 13:5,6.

Mede denies that the 'little horn' can mean Antiochus Epiphanes, because the reign of the little horn extends to the time when the Ancient of Days comes in fiery flames; but Antiochus died 160 years and more before the birth of Christ. And he asserts that the horn is the same with the antichrist of St. John.

Ex. 29:21, 'In that day I will cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud,' &c.

The enlargement of Jehoiachin is supposed to be referred to. See 2 K. 25:27. Jer. 52:31.

Daniel and his three companions were also advanced to authority. Da. 2:48,49. 3:30. These marks of favor bestowed on the Jews were preludes to their general restoration.

Horns are also used in Hebrew to express rays of light, from their resemblance to them, as being pointed, and in general, pointing upwards. Hence we find horn and lamp conjoined in Ps. 132:17. God is thus represented in De. 33:2,

'From his right hand issued streams of light.'
And in Ha. 3:4,

'His brightness was as the light;
Rays (lit. horns) streamed from his hand,
And there was the hiding-place of his power.'

A pencil or cone of rays, issuing from a point, diverges in the shape of a horn, as New come observes.

Moses is represented by the Jewish writers as wearing horns; i. e. his face shone with a divine lustre, when he came down from Sinai, after his intercourse with God.

The heathens also attribute horns to the moon, and to some of the supposed deities, for a similar reason. Hence Valerius Flaccus, Argon. b. 2, v. 55,

'Parque nec gravido curvata Cynthia cornu.'

And again,

'Arcton suspiciens minaculis cornu Leone.'

And Ovid,

'Quam de cornigeris de Jove natus erat.'

In Spanheim's Coina, there is one where Jupiter appears horned, with this inscription—'Theos Ammon.'

Mossiah is, in He. 1:3, called 'the brightness or splendour of the Father's glory'; and in Ec. 1:16, his countenance is described 'as the sun shining in his strength.' And the light that shone round Paul at his conversion, a light accompanying or proceeding from the Savior, is said to be a light above the brightness of the sun.

From this meaning of the Hebrew term, and from the action of the solar light upon the vegetable world, as the great instrument of producing plenty, came the notion in the heathen mythology of representing abundance by the emblem of a horn, the cornucopia, the feigned horn of Amalthæa, by which it was pretended Jupiter was nursed in his infancy; Amalthæa being the name assigned to the goat supposed to have nursed him, and which was afterwards converted into a star. See Ovid's Fæst. v. 117; Hygin. Astron. ii. 13; whose horn was thenceforth said to have the privilege, that whoever possessed it should immediately have what they desired; whence it came to be called the horn of plenty. And hence, perhaps, the Septuagint render the name of one of Job's daughters, viz. Kerenhappuch, by those words, '—the horn of Amalthæa.' See Callim. Hymn to Jupiter, lib. 48, 49,

'Thou drew'st the swelling teat of that famed goat, Kiod Amalthæa.'

See also Parkhurst's Lexicon on Septuagint, uol. plura.

La. 1:69, Jesus is called 'a horn of salvation'; i. e. a mighty Savior, equivalent to 'horn of David,' in Ps. 132:17, already referred to. This title is symbolical of the royal dignity and power of the Messiah. He is the anointed King in Zion. Ps. 2:6. He is the King of kings and Lord of lords, which name He carries written on his vesture and thigh. Re. 19:16. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, which shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms. Da. 2:44. He rules from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth. Ps. 72:8. Zch. 9:9, 10. All kings shall worship Him, and all nations shall serve Him. He is a King, on whose head are many crowns. Re. 19:12. He spoiled principalities and powers, and triumphed over them. He hath the keys of hades and of death.

We have the expression in Scripture, not unfrequently, of 'horns of the altar,' meaning the projections at the four corners, which were a symbol of the divine protection, the altar being regarded as an asylum or sanctuary; and therefore, when Amos says, 3:14, 'The horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground'; the meaning is, that there shall be no more altarements made thereon—the asylum or sanctuary, therefore, shall no more stand.

Those who fled to the altar for protection, took hold of the horns of it. Thus Adonijah did, when afraid of Solomon, and Joab, in like manner; but because the latter was guilty of willful murder, he was slain according to the law. Ex. 21:14.

The idolaters likewise had horns to their altars, for they mimicked the true religion in all outward matters. See Jer. 17:1. Am. 3:14. And they also, when they fled for protection, or implored the help of their gods, were wont to take hold of the horns of their altars. See Servius on Virgil, l. 6, v. 124, and Potter's Antiq. of Greece, vol. i. p. 193.

Further, the altars were looked upon as the tables of the gods, and, therefore, he who had caught hold on the altar, was considered as one who was received into friendship with the god to whom it was dedicated, and therefore as one who was not to be punished by man.

By Et. 21:14, it appears, that the altar of holocausts was to the Jews an asylum for crimes undesignedly committed. As to the practice of the heathen in this respect, the proofs are copious; whole tragedies of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, being founded on it. And the sanctuary of the altar was held so sacred and inviolable, that Æschylus in one place, amongst others, says, that 'an altar was stronger than a tower'—that it was an invincible shield.' Supplices, v. 198.

Hence, also, no doubt, arose the custom, in more modern times, of making churches, abbey, and other buildings, devoted to religious uses, an asylum for criminals, and a sanctuary for debtors.

HORSE. The horse, as Daubus observes, was of old used only for warlike expeditions, and not barely to ride, draw, and drudge, as is now practised with us.

Hence, in that noble description of the horse, Jb. 39:18–25, there is no notice taken of any quality of his but what relates to war.

So that the horse is the symbol of war and conquest. And therefore, when the prophet Zechariah, 10:3, says that 'God hath made Judah as his goodly horse in the battle,' the meaning is, that He will make them conquerors over his enemies, glorious and successful.

Thus, in Ps. 45:5, 27, rekes, to ride, is translated in the Septuagint by βασιλεύειν, to reign; and in several other places, to ride signifies to have dominion. De. 32:13. Ps. 65:13. Is. 58:14. Agreeably to this, the Indian and other interpreters say, that if any one dreams that he rides upon a generous horse, it denotes that he shall obtain dignity, fame, authority, prosperity, and a good name among the people; in short, all such things which may accrue to a man by good success in martial affairs.

And hence, from the horse's being the instrument of conquest, and therefore the symbol of the dignity, prosperity, and success he causes, when Carthage was founded, and a horse's head was dug up by the workmen, the soothsayers gave out that the city would be warlike and powerful. Justin. b. 18, c. 5.

As a horse is a warlike, so is he also a swift, creature, and is therefore not only the symbol of conquest, but of the swiftness of it. Jo. 2:4. He. 1:8. Jer. 4:13.

If the color of the horse be given, it must be particularly considered. White is the symbol of joy, felicity, and prosperity; and therefore white horses were used by conquerors on their days of triumph; Ovid. de Arte amandi, lib. 1, v. 214. And it was, and still is, the custom of the Eastern nations to ride on white horses at the marriage cavalcade.

White horses were also looked upon by the ancients as the swiftest. Hor. b. 1, Sat. 7, v. 8; Virgil, Æn. b. 12, v. 64.

By a white horse, therefore, all the good significations of a horse are greatly enhanced.

For a prince to dream that he rides armed, denotes according to the Persian and Egyptian, in ch. 156, that he shall overcome his enemies, and obtain great renown in war.

So the woman riding upon a beast, Re. 17:3, is explained by the angel to be (verse 18) the great city which reigns over the kings of the earth, viz. Rome.

Song 1:9,

'I have compared thee, O my love,
To a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.'

The comparison here may appear uncouth to the refined manners of this age, but the Greek and Latin poets frequently compare a beautiful woman to a heifer, a creature far inferior. Sophocles, Trach. 5, 539, so compares a delicate virgin. And Euripides calls Polyxena perceps; Hecuba 5, 506. And Horace calls a young woman Javencia, b. 2, Ode 5. See Du-

Vitrings thinks, that by the horses, in Zch. 10:3, the Maccabean heroes and soldiers are meant.

In Re. ch. 6, angels are described as sitting upon horses of various colors, denoting there by the promptitude and celerity of their movements in the execution of the divine purposes.

Horses were anciently consecrated to the sun, 2 K. 23:11; as Ovid, in his Fæst. b. 1, observes, 'The Persians sacrifice horses to the sun, that a sluggish victim may not be offered to a swift deity.'

HOST OF HEAVEN. Da. 8:10, 'And it (the little horn) waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.' See also verse 11.

Considered by many to point out the aspiring nature and usurping power of Antiochus Epiphanes, that would swell to such a pitch as to exceed all imaginable authority, so as to reach the stars, according to Ob. verse 4, or to ascend into heaven above the stars, and to exalt his throne, like the king of Babylon, in Is. 14:13. And in 2 Macc. 9:10, Antiochus is described as the man who thought he could reach to the stars of heaven.

The language that follows in this verse is, by a usual and familiar metaphor in Scripture, applicable to the Jews, or the then true church of God. Is. 94:31, 'the host of the high ones that are on high,' is explained by Vitrings of the Jewish rulers and people. God's people have their citizenship in heaven, and shine as stars, as lights or luminaries in the world. See Is. 14:13, and Re. 1:20, where the angels or governors of the churches are called stars. The priests and Levites, like the angels, were also continually waiting on the service of the King of heaven in the temple, as of old in the tabernacle; (see Nu. 8:24;) and those were that part of the host, or the holy people, or people of the holy God, as at verse 34, that were thrown down and trampled on.

Spencer, in his Treatise de Legibus Heb. b. 1, c. 4, p. 302, takes notice, that the Scripture often borrows expressions from military affairs, to accommodate itself to the use of the tabernacle; and hence is the frequent use of the term 'host.' The host of heaven, and the press of the host, he thinks must refer to the body of the priests, who exercised the offices of their warfare under the standards of the Deity. Now, Antiochus overthrew some of the most celebrated luminaries amongst the leaders of the Jewish people, and reduced them to the lowest disgrace.

But this prophecy is thought, after all, to receive its fulfilment, not by Antiochus, but by the Roman state, which arose in the north-west part of those nations which composed the body of the host, and was very small in the beginning, but became very great afterwards.

See Wintle on Daniel, Mede's Works, Zonch on the Prophecies, Bishop Newton, and others.

Host of heaven, Ge. 2:1, signifies the sun, moon, and stars, under the symbol of an army; in which the sun is considered as the king, the moon as his viceroy or prime minister in dignity, — the stars and planets as their standards, and the constellations as the battalions and squadrons of the army drawn up in order, that they may concur with their leaders to execute the designs and commands of the sovereign.

And thus, according to this notion, it is said in the song of Deborah, Jud. 5:20, 'the stars in their courses fought against Sisera.'

HOUSE is often used in Scripture for the family, children, and servants.

Ge. 7:1, 'Enter thou and all thy house (family) into the ark.'

Ex. 12:1, 'And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that He made them houses;' i. e. He prospered their families.

And so in Euripides, Bacch. 368, 'Woe is immovable, and keeps together a house;' an expression similar to that used by Solomon. Pr. 9:1,

'Wisdom hath builded her house;

'She hath hewn out her seven pillars.'

And, therefore, in the symbolical language, houses, palaces, and sons, mutually explain each other.

Thus, according to the Persian and Egyptian interpreters, ch. 148, 'If a king dreams that he orders a new palace to be built for his habitation, and it be finished, it denotes that he shall beget a son and heir; children, or rather sons, being the settlement of a house or family.'

2 S. 7:11, 'Also the Lord telleth thee, that He will make thee a house; i. e. He will give thee offspring, who may receive and may preserve the royal dignity.'

Ps. 49:12, 'Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever; i. e. that their posterity shall always flourish. Est *Du-*rell has remarked, that all the ancient versions read otherwise — they read abeyance, instead of heredity; and then the sense is,

'Their ambitions shall be their houses forever;

'Their dwelling-place to all generations.'

Ge. 43:16, 'Joseph said to the ruler of his house; i. e. to the manager of his domestic concerns.'

Is. 36:3, 'Eliakim, who was over the house, or household; i. e. his steward.'

Ge. 30:30, 'When shall I provide for mine own house also? i. e. get wealth to maintain my family.' See 1 Ti. 5:8.

HUNGER and THIRST are the symbols of affliction.

Thus, in De. 8:3, it is said, 'He humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger; i. e. where the latter is the instrument of the former.'

So De. 32:24, 'They shall be burnt with hunger; i. e. they shall be tormented or afflicted.' So to fast, is often called to afflict one's soul, as in Le. 16:29–31. Is. 58:3.

In Aristophanes, (Aves), hunger is proverbially used for great misery. See 1 Co. 4:11. 2 Co. 11:27. Phil. 4:12.

By several expressions of our Savior, to hunger and thirst signifies to be in want of hearing God's word; that is, to be hindered by persecution from worshipping God in peace. See Ps. 23: Ec. 24:19. Is. 4:13, 14. 6:35. Am. 8:11. Ez. 7:26.

HYSSOP. An herb of detestive and cleansing qualities, used in sprinkling the blood of the paschal lamb. Ex. 12:22.

In cleansing the leprosy. Le. 14:4–6, &c.

In composing the water of the purification. Nu. 19:6; and sprinkling it, verse 18. It was a type or emblem of the purifying virtue of the bitter sufferings of Jesus Christ.

Pliny often mentions its virtues: 'Calidum in aspongia apothumum, adjecto — nat hyssop scabellum, modicum sedis vitis.' Nat. Hist. b. 23, c. 1, and in other places.

I.

INCENSE is the symbol of prayer, as mentioned in Re. 5:8, and 8:4, in both which passages, as in many others, the language is borrowed from the Old Testament ritual. So, in Isa. 1:11, where there is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles, it is given under Jewish images:

My name shall be great among the nations;
And in every place shall incense be brought unto my name,
And a pure offering.

In which passage, see Mede's Christian Sacrifice, ch. 6.

The same is the case in Zech. 14:16, where the prophet speaks according to Jewish ideas. In this, Michaëlis observes: "Non quidem evitæ, sed in spiritu et veritate, perinde ac sicut Paschas et Pentecostes." 1 Co. 5:7, 8, Sub exitum anni gratias, seu finem mundi—berimus tunc habituri messiem donorum gratias et Spiritus Sancti." Bib. Hale, 1730. see Newcome.

This Jewish mode of speaking is observable in another place. The smoke of incense, like all other smokes, was said to ascend. So, speaking of Cornelius, Ac. 10:4, the angel says, Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.

In Re. 5:8, golden bowls full of incense are mentioned, fit representations, as Lowman observes, of the prayers of the church, and excessive of the most solemn worship. Thus the Psalmist, Ps. 141:2, 'Let my prayer be set before thee as incense.' In Re. 8:4, the smoke of the incense is said to ascend up before God, at the angel's hand; an allusion to the constant offering of incense in the temple, and to God's gracious acceptance of their worship.

Things thus represented in heaven, prefigure things here on earth, says Dr. Henry More, and hence ceremonies of the temple, the devotions of the Christians, whose prayers are here represented as coming up in remembrance before God.

In the oneirocritics, incense is the symbol of favor and good fame.

To incense men with a censor, signifies, according to the Indian, ch. 28, to speak harsh words, but sweet at the same time, or profitable to them; the harshness being signified by the fire, and the sweetness by the incense.

IRON is the symbol of strength. Ferrarius de metall. p. 211, says, 'Ferrum duritie operat omnia ferre metalla; hinc ad opera quæ huiusmodi durant, faciendâ conduct, præcipue arma.' Is. 48:4, 'Thy neck is as an iron neck.'

Iron requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it. It is sometimes made the symbol of sharp afflictions. See De. 4:20, 1 K. 8:51. Since iron requires the strongest fire of all metals to fuse it, there is a peculiar propriety in the expression, 'a furnace for iron,' or an iron furnace for violent and sharp afflictions.

Ps. 107:10, 'Being bound in affliction and iron;' i. e. by a hendiadys, bound in afflictive iron.

Da. 2:33, 41, 'The legs (of the image) were of iron, his feet part of iron, and part of clay.' See Jerome's commentary on this passage, quoted by Bishop Newton; and Josephus, on the same subject, Antiq. b. 10, ch. 1, § 4; and Mede's Works, b. 4, letter 6.

Da. 7:7, the fourth beast is said to have great teeth. That this and the former both denote the Roman power has been well proved by many.

Jer. 15:12,
'Shall he break iron in pieces,
Iron from the North, and brass?'

i. e., as Blayney explains it, 'Shall the enemy rush or overpower one whom I have made like the hardest iron and brass?' alluding to what God had said to the prophet, when He first engaged him in his service. 1:18.

'Iron from the North,' is supposed to denote, in a primary sense, that species of hardened iron or steel, called in Greek, Chalybs, from the Thalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine sea, and consequently lying to the north of Judea, by whom the art of tempering steel is said to have been discovered.

Jer. 17:1, 'The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron;' i. e. idolatry was indelibly fixed in their affections and memory.

1 K. 22:11, Zedekiah the false prophet makes use of horns of iron symbolically, and says to Jehoiab, 'With these,' i. e. with a strength such as is represented by these, 'thou shalt gore the Syrians, until thou have destroyed them.'

Pr. 27:17,
As iron is sharpened by iron,
So a man is sharpened by the countenance of his friend,
i. e. receives alacrity, strength, and spirits.
Ez. 4:3, 'Take unto thee a plate of iron,' probably such as cakes were baked on. Taylor's Heb. Conc. This may denote the strong trenches of the besiegers, or their firmness and perseverance in the siege.

Re. 9:9, 'They had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron.'

This denotes, says Daubuz, that the Saracens should be a bold, hard, mischievous enemy, being so well armed for that purpose. And this their great victories and conquests have sufficiently verified.

It is observable, that the natural locust hath about its body a pretty hard shell, of the color of iron, to which there is an allusion in Claudian, Eplgr. 33, so that herein the symbol of the breastplate is exactly suited to the natural locust.

That iron denotes strength appears from Da. 2:40, where it is said, 'Iron, which breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things.'

ISLAND. It is certain that the Hebrews did not mean the same as we do by islands, that is, lands encompassed with water all around; but simply countries or regions at a distance, such as they could not reach without crossing the sea, or such as had a line of sea-coast. Hence Lowth, for most part, renders the Hebrew term Yam, qum, by distant lands. Bochart has shown, with much probability, that the countries peopled by Chittim, the grandson of Japhet, are Italy and the adjacent provinces of Europe, which lie along the Mediterranean Sea. The proper translation of Yam in many passages would be, 'the region which is by the sea-side.' Mede thinks the Greek ala derived from Yam, and that Ægyptus is ala, Cuphiti, Æthiopia, ala, Theophi, &c. Disc. 50. Zph. 2:11,

'Jehovah will be terrible against them,
For He will smite all the gods of the earth;
And He will furnish the nations
Shall for themselves also find every one from his place.'

By the earth, says Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel, p. 276, the Jews understood the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land; and by the isles of the sea, they understood the places to which they sailed by sea, particularly all Europe.

The prophet here foretells the gradual fall of idolatry, and its deep, and at length deadly wound, by the spreading of the gospel.

Re. 6:14, 'Every mountain and island were moved out of their places.' Great public calamities are described in the prophets, as if the order of nature were overturned; so that the expressions here and in 16:30 are not to be understood literally.

Every place or haven to which ships resorted, says Daubuz, was by the Jews called an island. Thus Tyre, as it was anciently, is called the isle, in Is. 23:2, 6, though seated only near the sea; and the Tyrians are called 'the inhabitants of the isle,' v. 3, 11. And because the Hebrews looked upon islands as places of merchandise, to which men went to traffic and fetch riches, hence it comes, that an island, in their notion, is akin to Mart-town, a rich, trading, populous city, a place whence riches are brought. Thus in Ez. 27:3, Tyre is called a mart, ἑμπορίον, of the people from many islands. And the whole chapter, together with the Targum, is a proof of this, especially the 15th verse, where it is said, 'Many isles were the merchandise of thine hand.' So in Is. 60:3, islands and ships are mentioned in order to produce and bring silver and gold.

Hence, ships are the symbols of profit and riches. See SHIP.

In Euripides, μύσας πλοῦτον λίμνη, a great haven of riches, signifies a great revenue.

Orest. v. 1077.
So that islands symbolically signify riches, revenues, ways of trading, and the like. And thus America and the West Indies may, in the Hebrew style, be termed islands to Britain, Spain, &c., because of the commerce and traffic between them.

Hence, in Is. 23:4, it is said of Tyre—

'The harvest of the river was her revenues,
And she became the mart of the nations.'

He compares their trade by sea to the overflowing of the Shihor or Nile, and says that it brings them riches, as the Nile does to Egypt by its fertility.

Jb. 22:30, 'He shall deliver the island of the innocent.'

Durell observes, that At here is not a substantive, but an adverb, and translates it thus—'The innocent, wherever he is, will deliver himself, and deliverance shall be to thee by the purity of thine hands.'

K.

KEY is used as a symbol of government, power, and authority.

Is. 22:22,
'I will lay the key of the house of David upon his shoulder.'
See Lowth's note on the passage. In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed, with great clearness as well as force, by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Savior, therefore, has on a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression, Mat. 16:19, and in Re. 3:7, has applied to Himself the very words of the prophet. 'He that hath the key of David, He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth.'

Mat. 16:19,
'And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.'

I will give, i. e. after my resurrection, the keys, i. e. the power of preaching the gospel officially, of administering the sacraments, and of exercising church discipline, as a steward of the mysteries of God, and as a faithful servant whom the Lord hath set over his household, not for domination, but for edification.

'Of the kingdom of heaven'—not of earth.

Bernard remarks on this passage: 'Quænam tibi major videtur et dignitas et potestas dimittendi peccata, an prædica dividendi? Sed non est comparatio. Habent hæc infima et terrena iudices suos, Reges et Principes terre. Quid finis alios invaditis? Quid faciem vestram in alienam mensuram extenditis? Non quia indigni vos, sed quia indignum vobis talibus insisteret, quippe potioribus occupatis.' Nor is the observation of Prideaux, bishop of Worcester, undeserving of quotation: 'Peter obtained no supremacy over the rest of the apostles; he received the keys with the rest, not above the rest—and those, not of earth, but of heaven, as being first in age, zeal, and boldness, not in office—'to feed Christ's sheep, not his own.'

Peter may be said to have opened the kingdom of heaven, as being the first who preached the gospel to the Jews after his Master's ascension, Ac. ch. 2; and to the Gentiles, Ac. ch. 10. Re. 9:1, and 20:1, 'the key of the abyss;' i. e. a commission to open it, to let loose Satan to deceive the nations.

On this last passage, Henry More remarks—'A fallen star signifies a lapsed spirit; and the having the key of the bottomless pit given him, denotes his power in the kingdom of darkness, of which a key is the symbol.'

Re. 1:18, 'The keys of hades and of death;' i. e. having power over the separate state of departed spirits; to call men out of this life into the invisible state, to raise them from death at last, and to reunite soul and body at the resurrection. See the Orphic hymn to Pluto, quoted by Parkhurst.

The heathen, to denote the government of Pluto, and the rest of the infernal gods, assigned to them the keys of the infernal pits. And, therefore, Pluto and Proserpine were represented with keys in their hands. Aristophanes says of Juno, when the pagan world supposed to be that deity who presided over the nuptial rite, that she keeps the keys of marriage. Silence is represented in Sophocles (Oed.) by a golden key on the tongue. And in the Arabian writers, Soliman ben Abdalmalek had the title of the key of goodness, because he had set at liberty all the wretches in prison, and done good to all his subjects.

As stewards of a great family, especially of the royal household, bore a key, probably a golden one, as the lords of the bedchamber do, in token of their office, the phrase of giving a person a key, naturally grew into an expression of raising him to great power.

Key is used also as a symbol of ability to interpret Scripture. Lu. 11:50, 'Ye have taken away the key of knowledge.' And, according to the same analogy, 'to open the Scriptures,' Lu. 24:32, is to show the true meaning of them, whereby others may understand them.

It is said that authority to explain the law and the prophets was given among the Jews by the delivery of a key, and of one Rabbi Samuel we read, that after his death, they put his key and his tablets into his coffin, because he did not deserve to have a son, to whom he might leave the ensigns of his office. If the Jews really had such a custom in our Savior's time, the above expression may seem a beautiful reference to it. Parkhurst on Klay, or KILL, or SLAY. To kill, or slay, is to be explained according to the nature of the subject spoken of.

To kill men means to destroy them utterly. Mat. 10:38, 'Fear not them who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul.'

To kill a kingdom, is to destroy utterly the power it had to act as such; for acting and living are analogical to each other; and government is the life of the commonwealth. And, therefore, as long as the commonwealth can perform the actions of government, so long it lives; if they are stopped, that life dies.

Wrath is said to kill a man, Jb. 5:2, either by its injurious effects, when indulged, upon the human frame; or by leading them to commit serious deeds, and so bringing them under the extreme penalty of the law, or as offending God, and provoking Him to cut them off.

Pr. 21:25, the desire of the slothful is said to kill him, because he lacks activity to procure the desired object lawfully, and has recourse to ruinous means of gratifying his desires.

2 Co. 3:6, 'the letter,' i. e. of the law of God, is said to kill.

It condemns and denounces the most solemn penalties, even that of death, upon every transgressor, leaving no hope, and furnishing no strength.

Ho. 6:5,

'Therefore have I hated them by the prophets;
I have slain them by the words of my mouth;'

i. e. I have been most importunate with them. See similar expressions from Terence and Menander, quoted by Newcome.

KING signifies the possessor of the supreme power, whether lodged in one or more persons.

Pr. 8:15,16,

'By Me kings reign, and princes decree justice;
By Me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.'

It also frequently signifies a succession of kings.

And king and kingdom are synonymous, as appears from Da. 7:17,23.

It is applied especially to God, as Sovereign over all. Ps. 10:16,

'Jehovah is King forever and ever.'

Ps. 29:10,

'Jehovah sitteth upon the flood;
Jehovah sitteth King forever.'

Also Ps. 44:4, and others frequently.

It is applied to the Messiah. Ps. 2:6,

'I have not my King upon my holy hill of Zion.'

It is applied to all true Christians, Re. 1:6, who are consecrated to God as kings and priests.

In 1 Pe. 2:13,17, it particularly signifies the Roman emperor, whom the Greek writers call king. See Josephus de Hello, b. 3, c. 7, § 3.

Moloch, the name given to an idol worshipped by the Ammonites and others, in the Hebrew language signifies king, and is generally translated by the Septuagint 'the ruler;' and in Jer. 32:35, they call him Moloch, the king. The sun is supposed to have been worshipped under this name, as the king or lord of day. And the heathen deity Saturn is understood to correspond to the Moloch of the Scriptures, as appears by the similarity of their rites, and the sacrifices offered to them. See Dioid. Sic. b. 20. It is applied to Satan, in Re. 9:11; for, though the natural locusts have no king, (see Pr. 30:37,) yet those figurative locusts mentioned by John have one, who is the angel of the bottomless pit, the prince of the power of darkness, justly called the destroyer.

It is applied to death, in Jb. 18:14, who is there called the 'king of terrors.'

In Jb. 41:34, it is applied to the leviathan or crocodile.

'He looketh upon every thing with haughtiness;
He is a king over all the children of pride.'

Hosea says, 3:4,5,

'The sons of Israel shall abide many days
Without a king, and without a prince, &c.
Afterwards the sons of Israel shall return,
And shall seek Jehovah their God,
And David their king.
And shall reverence Jehovah and his goodness, in the latter days.'

This prophecy, which some refer to Zerubabel, and some to the Messiah, in all probability remains to be accomplished. It is the opinion of Newcome, that on the future return of God's people, an illustrious king of this name and stock will reign over Israel, and transmit the kingdom to his descendants forever. Compare Jer. 30:9, Ez. 34:23,24-37:24,25. In the new song, Re. 15:3, God is called the 'King of saints.'

'Kings of the east,' Re. 16:12. Mede and Lowman both consider the Turks to be meant under this title. The latter thinks the Euphrates means the Adriatic Sea, and that an invasion of the Papal territories is here intended.

KINGDOM Used sometimes to signify heaven; as in Mat. 26:29, 2 Ti. 4:18.

Also, government or supreme administration. 1 B. 18:8.

Also, the state of the Christian church under the gospel dispensation. Mat. 3:2, &c.

Also, the royal priesthood of the true people of God. Ex. 19:6, 1 Pr. 2:9.

Kingdom of the stone, Da. 2:34,44, and kingdom of the mountain, Da. 2:35,45, are both meant of the kingdom of the Messiah.

See Med. Works, p. 743, &c.

KISS. The symbol of idolatrous worship.

Ho. 13:2, 'Let the men who sacrifice kiss the calves.' See 1 K. 19:18.

This Cicero describes a statue of Hercules, as having 'ritum ejus ac mentem paulo altius, quod in precibus et gratulationibus non solum adorari, verum etiam osculari, solebant;' in Verr. act 2, l. 4, § 43.

Jb. 31:27, 'or my mouth hath kissed my hand.' There is here an evident allusion to the superstitious rites of idolaters. The custom of kissing the hand, in token of adoration, is very ancient, as well as universal. The ground of it appears to be awe or respect; thus Job, when he determines to be silent before God, says, 'I will lay my hand upon my mouth.' 40:4.

Pliny, who he enumerates strange customs, says, 'In worshipping, we use the right hand for kissing, and move the whole body round; in Gaul, they prefer using the left.' Nat. Hist. b. 28, c. 2.

Apuleius observes, that many of his countrymen applied their right hand to their mouths, the first finger being upon the thumb erect, in order that they might perform due adoration to the goddess Venus.

Lucian also remarks, that the poor, who had nothing to offer in sacrifice but the kissing of their hands, were not excluded.

Demosthenes, being carried into a temple, is said to have kissed his hand, in token of adoration.

The Syrian churches, to this day, when they receive the sacrament, are said to kiss the bread and cup before they partake of them.

Thus courtiers kiss the king's hand when presented to him, or when appointed to office; and it is customary now, in many countries, to kiss the garment of a superior, out of respect.

The holy kiss, or kiss of love, Ro. 16:16, 1 Co. 16:20, and elsewhere, was a mere transfer of the common mode of salutation in Eastern countries, in ancient times, into an affectionate expression of pure attachment for the truth's sake, each saluting those of their own sex only, as described in the Apost. Constit. b. 2, c. 57. This practice is mentioned by Justin Martyr in his Apology: 'Prayers being ended, we salute one another with a kiss, and then the bread and cup are brought to the president.'

The men and women sat apart in the Christian assemblies, the same as was done in the Jewish synagogues.

Ps. 2:12, 'Kiss the Son, lest he be angry.' To kiss, in this place, implies to reverence.

Thus, 'all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him,' 1 K. 19:18.

KNEE. To bow the knee, is to worship. 1 K. 19:18, Ro. 11:4.

Also, to pray. Ep. 3:14.

Also, to be in subjection. Phil. 2:10.

That kneeling was the posture of prayer, see 2 Ch. 6:13, Da. 6:10, Lu. 22:41, Ac. 7:60, 9:40, 9:36, 21:5, Ezr. 9:5, Ps. 3:14.

Knees are sometimes put for persons; as in Jb. 44, He. 12:12.

L.

LAMB. The symbol of meekness.

Is. 11:6, 'Then shall the wolf take up his abode with the lamb.'

Is. 65:25, 'The wolf and the lamb shall feed together.'

Jer. 11:19, 'For I was like a tame lamb that is led to slaughter.'

Hence it is the special and peculiar symbol of Jesus Christ, who is declared by the Baptist to be the Lamb of God, because He was to be sacrificed to Him, in order to take away the sins of the world. We find Isaiah predicting his suffering under this character, 53:7—

'It was estimated, and He was made unnumbered;
And He opened not his mouth;
As a lamb that is led to the slaughter,
And as a sheep dumb before her shearsers,
So He opened not his mouth.'

See Ac. 8:32.

Jesus is recognized as such in the visions of John, Re. 5:6, &c. 'And lo, in the midst of the throne stood a lamb, as it had been slain.'

True Christians, who resemble their Master, have the same name assigned to them. Lu. 10:3, 'Behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.' See Jn. 21:15.

The hypocritical assumption of this meekness, and the carrying on of persecution under a show of charity to the souls of men, and bestowing absolutions and indulgences on those who conform to its rules, appears to have given rise to the application of this otherwise sacred title to Antichrist. Re. 13:11, 'And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.' To what particular power or period this passage is applicable, it is extremely difficult to decide. Every commentator differs from another. Lowman tries to reconcile them, but I think unsuccessfully.

LAMP, on account of its light, is the symbol of government or a governor. Thus, concerning the law of God, the Psalmist says, Ps. 119:105, 'Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my paths,' the law being that whereby the king was to be guided. And in 1 K. 11:36, a lamp signifies the seat and domains, or else the perpetual succession, of a kingdom. The words are, 'That my servant David may have a lamp always before me in Jerusalem.' But the Septuagint have, 'That my servant David may have a seat or position.' So the Septuagint turn the Hebrew of 1 K. 15:4, by καταλείπω; and it follows ὡς στήλη, a remnant to settle a foundation. But in 2 K. 8:19, they have λύχνος, a lamp; all which expressions are parallel to this in 2 S. 7:13, 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever;' this being more proper, and the rest being symbolical expressions of the same promise of God.

The oneirocrits apply the misfortunes that happen to the lamp, to the loss of a kingdom or power to rule.

In the Greek church, in the consecration of a bishop, among other symbolical ceremonies, there was a lamp delivered to him, and to the patriarch of Constantinople, a double lamp.

In the Eastern countries, weddings were celebrated with lamps or torches: the bridegroom and bride, the bridesmen and bridesmaids, having each one in their hands. And the same custom was observed among the Greeks and Romans. See Mat. 25:1. Homer, Iliad 6, v. 422. Eurip. Phœnia. v. 246; Medea, v. 1057; Virgil. Eclog. 8, v. 29.

The Jews used to light lamps at their festivals; a custom sneered at by Persius, Sat. 5, v. 179. And the same was common among the Romans—on occasions of domestic rejoicing, the doors of the house were hung with laurels, and illuminated with lamps.

Juvénal thus expresses himself in one of his Satires—

'Longue erexit lampas rœmæ.
Et matutine operatur hæc lucerna.'

It appears from Tertullian, that the Christians adopted this practice. He thus charges the alienated disciples of the faith:—'Ped lucernæ, inquit, (nempe Christianæ), opera vestra. At nunc lucet tabernæ: et janus nostræ: plures jam invenies fores sine lucernæ et hæretis quam Christianorum.'

The Jews probably took their custom of burning lamps at their feasts from the Egyptians. Herodotus, b. 11, tells us, there was an annual sacrifice at Lais, known by the name of the feast of lamps. The Chinese have a similar festival at the present day.

Persius, in the passage before referred to, must not be understood to speak of the feast of lamps among the Jews. That festival was instituted by Judas, and was held annually on the 25th of the month Chislev. See Josephus, and Pictor des Ceremonies des Juifs.

In Ge. 15:17, the words 'burning lamp' mean a flame or cone of fire, in the midst of the smoky cloud, the emblem of the divine presence, as at Sinai, Ez. 19:16; so, in Ez. 24:15, lucidum are flames or flashes of fire.

When lamp is used to signify succession, as in that passage, 'I have ordained a lamp for mine Anointed,' Ps. 132:17, the metaphor is taken from the light being continually kept in by fresh supplies successively. Theocritus uses the same expression, Idyll. 27.

Lu. 12:35, 'and your lamps burning;' a phrase to denote constant vigilance.

LEAVES of a tree are explained by the interpreters, in ch. 15, of the common sort of men, αἰσχροί, as trees themselves are the symbols of the higher orders, or nobles, ἀριστοί and μεγαλοί.

Leaves that are strong and green, denote men of sound judgment; those that are weak and withered, men of a weak judgment and depraved manner.

Sometimes leaves are explained of clothes, on account of the analogy; since both serve for a covering.

Homer beautifully compares the human race to leaves, Il. 6, 146:

'Life leaves on trees the race of man is found.
New green in youth, now withering on the ground:
Another race the following spring supplies,
They fall successive, and successive rise:
So generative in their career decay,
So flourish these, when these are passed away. PAPA.

Job, deprecating the divine inflictions, uses the same simile, 13:25—

'Will Thou break a leaf driven to and fro?
Will Thou pursue the dry stubble?'

And Is. 64:6,

'We are like the leaf, all of us,
And our times, like the wind, carry us away.'

Re. 22:2, 'The leaves of the tree (of life) were for the healing of the nations.' (see Ez. 47:12); i. e. they have a sovereign virtue against all sorts of indisposition; they are calculated to promote immortality.

LEOPARD. The symbolic character of the leopard rests chiefly upon three of his distinguishing qualities, viz.

1. Cruelty, as referred to in Is. 11:6. Jer. 5:6. Ho. 13:7.

2. Swiftiness. See Ha. 1:8.

3. Variety of skin. See Jer. 13:23.

Hence, in hieroglyphic language, a leopard represents, — an implacable enemy — a crafty and pernicious person — a powerful and fraudulent enemy.

And the variety of his spots denotes wickedness and deceit.

See Artemidorus and the onecrocity.

In Jer. 5:6, the wild beasts there spoken of are the king of Babylon and his troops.

In Is. 11:3, the meaning plainly is, that men of a fierce, untractable disposition shall, in the gospel kingdom, associate peaceably with those of an opposite temper, being subdued by divine influence.

The passage in Jer. 13:23 clearly imports, that habits of sinning are as difficult to eradicate as it would be to take out the natural spots of a leopard.

Da. 7:6, 'After this I beheld, and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.'

The founders of the four great monarchies are probably called beasts, on account of the savage and cruel measures they pursued. The person here alluded to is generally considered to be Alexander the Great, and in many respects, the parallel between him and the leopard must hold. His well-known reply to one who asked him how he obtained so many signal victories, of πᾶν δαβαλλόμενος, i. e. never delaying, is quite consonant with the celerity of the leopard, and the method by which it leaps on its prey; as his daring to engage with Darius and the most powerful prince, is illustrative of the leopard's spirit and courage, which will rouse it to a contest with the largest and fiercest wild beasts. The leopard, says Bochart, is of small stature, but of great courage, so as not to be afraid to engage with the lion and the largest animals. And so Alexander, a little king in comparison, of small stature too, and with a small army, dared to attack the king of kings, that is, Darius, whose kingdom was extended from the Ægean Sea to the Indies.

The leopard is said to fix his eye upon the prey, in order to take the surest occasion of seizing them. This Pliny observes, 'Insidit pardi condensa arborum, occultatque eorum ramis in præteritum desiliunt.' Leopards, tamed and taught to hunt, are made use of, according to Harmer, in Palestine, for hunting, and seize the prey with surprising agility. When the leopard leaps, he is said to throw himself seventeen or eighteen feet at a time.

Non senior extulit illum
Sultus, et in media ject super arida cætervas,
Quam per summa rapit celerem vorabula pardum.'
Lucas, b. 6.

All this well expresses the speed of Alexander's conquests in Persia and the Indies, which were performed in ten or twelve years' time.

The leopard is a spotted animal, and so was a proper symbol of Alexander, when we consider the different manners of the nations which Alexander commanded, and by whose help he became the conqueror of the world — as well as the diversified disposition of Alexander himself, who was sometimes merciful and sometimes cruel, alternately temperate and drunken, abstemious and incontinent.

By the four wings on its back or sides seems to be meant the union of the four empires — the Assyrian, Median, Persian, and Grecian; or, as some think, Persia, Greece, Egypt, and India. But in this there is much uncertainty. May we not with greater propriety say, that the rapidity with which these nations were united under Alexander is fitly denoted by the character of wings?

After the death of Alexander, the partition of his kingdom into four parts is probably what is meant by the four heads of the beast. And if we reflect on the small beginnings of this power — the difficulties which it surmounted — and the vast strides which it made towards universal empire, extending its conquests as far as the Ganges in so short a space as twelve years, (1 Macc. 1:7,) we shall not be at a loss to assign a fair interpretation for the last clause of this verse, and to conclude that such a dominion was the gift of God.' See Wintle on Daniel.

The 'four heads' were Cassander, Ptolemy, Lysimachus, and Seleucus, Alexander's captains and successors.

Ptolemy reigned over Egypt, Lybia, Arabia, Carthage, and Palestine; Cassander over Macedonia, Greece, and Epirus; Lysimachus over Thrace and Bithynia; Seleucus over Babylon, Syria, and the rest of the empire. This division continued for several years. See Diod. Sic. b. 20; Polyb. b. 5, &c.

And here I think it right to insert the value.

SYMBOL DICT.

able observations of Prideaux in reference to this subject, part 1, b. 8 — 'After that, Alexander subdued the Mardans, Arians, Drangeans, Aracausians, and several other nations, over which he flew with victory swifter than others can travel, often with his horse pursuing his enemies upon the spur whole days and nights, and sometimes making long marches for several days, one after the other, as once he did in pursuit of Darius, of near forty miles a day, for eleven days together; so that, by the speed of his marches, he came upon his enemy before they were aware of him, and conquered them before they could be in a posture to resist him.' Which exactly agrees with the description given of him in the prophecies of them under the similitude of a panther or leopard with four wings; for he was impetuous and fierce in his warlike expeditions, as a panther after his prey, and came upon his enemies with that speed, as if he flew with a double pair of wings. And to this purpose he is, in another part of these prophecies, compared to a he-goat coming from the west, with that swiftness upon the king of Media and Persia, that he seemed as if his feet did not touch the ground. And his actions, as well in this comparison as in the former, fully verified the prophecy.

Re. 13:2, 'And the beast which I saw was like a leopard.' This is generally considered to be the symbol of Rome papal, represented as a tyrannical government, whose characters resembled those mentioned in Daniel's vision of the four monarchies, namely, rapacity, swiftness, strength, and cruelty; the leopard being the symbol of the Greeks — the bear, of the Persians — the lion, of the Babylonians. Rome papal, or the beast here represented, is said to be like unto a leopard: 'And his feet were as those of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion;' meaning, that it partook of the qualities of these animals, or rather of the nations whom they symbolized; in which interpretation, whatever truth there is may easily be proved by reference to the history of the papacy, from its first rise to the present hour.

LIGHT. Lights or luminaries signify ruling powers, because they show the way, and, consequently, direct and govern men in their conduct, who otherwise would not know what to do, or whither to go.

Sapor, king of Persia, writing to Constantius, called himself 'the brother of the sun and moon;' i. e. one who ruled the world, as well as those luminaries do. Anim. Marc. b. 17.

On account of the luminaries governing the day and night, all luminaries, in the symbolical language, signify ruling powers.

And the light itself is well employed to signify the edicts, laws, rules, or directions that proceed from them for the good of their subjects. Thus, of the great King of all, the Psalmist says, Ps. 119:105, 'Thy word is a light unto my path;' and Ho. 6:5, 'Thy judgments are as the light.'

In Jn. 8:12, Christ is called 'the light of the world.' And Tully calls Rome, as governing the world (Orat. pro Sylla), 'the light of the nations.' And with Philo, 'instruction is the light of the soul.'

Agreeably to the notion of lights being the symbols of good government, light also signifies protection, deliverance, and joy.

LIGHTNING. On account of the fire attending their light, they are the symbols of edicts enforced with destruction to those who oppose them, or hinder others from giving obedience to them. Ps. 144:6, Zch. 9:14, Ps. 18:14, Re. 4:5, 16:18.

Thunders and lightnings, when they proceed from the throne of God, as in Re. 4:5, are fit representations of God's glorious and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon the earth, it expresses some judgment of God on the world, as in Re. 20:9. The voices, thunders, lightnings, and great hail, in Re. 16:18-21, are interpreted expressly of an exceeding great plague, so that men blasphemed on account of it.

LION. A lion is, in general, the symbol of a king. The Mussulmans call Ali, Mahomet's son-in-law, 'The lion of God always victorious.' 'To have the head of a lion portends,' says Artemidorus, 'obtaining of victory.' By the head of a lion the Egyptians represented a vigilant person or guardian, the lion sleeping with his eyes open.

Ge. 49:9, Judah is styled a lion's whelp, and is compared to a lion and lioness couching, whom no one dares to rouse. The warlike character and the conquests of this tribe are here prophetically described; but the full force of the passage will not be perceived, unless we know that a lion or lioness, when lying down after satisfying its hunger, will not attack any person. Mungo Park has recorded an instance of his providential escape from a lion thus cir-cumstanced, which he saw lying near the road, and passed unhurt. Horne's Introduction, vol. ii. p. 642.

Ez. 19:2,3.

'What was thy mother? A lioness:

She lay down among lions:

In the midst of young lions she nourished her whelps;'

An allusion to Ge. 49:9, says Grotius. Judea was among the nations like a lioness among the beasts of the forest; she had strength and sovereignty. The whelp, mentioned in verse 3, means Jehoahaz, the son of Josiah, whom Pharaoh Necho put in bonds, and carried into Egypt. 2 K. 23:33,34. It is said, verse 8, 'He was taken in their pit.' The Arabs dig a pit where the lions are observed to enter, and, covering it slightly with reeds or small branches of trees, they frequently decoy and catch them. Pliny has taken notice of the same practice. See Shaw's Travels.

Am. 3:8, 'The lion hath roared; who will not fear?'

The roaring of the lion is in itself one of the most terrible sounds in nature; but it becomes still more dreadful when it is known to be a sure prelude of destruction to whatever living creature comes in his way. He does not usually set up his horrid roar till he beholds his prey, and is just going to seize it. The awful admonitions uttered by the prophets are as natural a consequence of God's command, as fear is of the lion's roaring.

Fremite leonem qualem audito tener

Tundim juvenem apertis molibus latos:

At ille arvens, matre summo, leonem

Prædam minorum coribus vastis premens

Frangit, vehique: talis a nostro sinu

Te rapit hostis.' Sen. Troad. 794.

Jo. 3:16,

'The Lord shall roar out of Zion.'

That this expression is metaphorical, needs no remark. God's being said to roar out of Zion and Jerusalem, intimates both the courage of the Jews fighting under his protection, and the certainty of their success.

'The heavens and the earth shall shake.'

These words are a continuation of the metaphor. As a lion, when he roars, makes the woods or plains to resound, and the beasts of the field to tremble, so God, being here compared to this fierce creature, his voice is justly said to make the very heavens and earth shake; the plain meaning of which is, all should be thrown into the utmost consternation, like a man seeing a roaring lion coming upon him to devour him, or as if he saw the very heavens and earth themselves moving, and in the utmost disorder.

Da. 7:4, 'The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings.'

The Chaldean or Babylonian empire is here represented. See Jer. 47. Its progress to what was then deemed universal empire was rapid, and therefore it has the wings of an eagle. See Jer. 48:40, and Ez. 17:3. It is said by Megasthenes and Strabo, that this power advanced as far as Spain. When its wings were plucked or torn out, that is, when it was checked in its progress by frequent defeats, it became more peaceable and humane, agreeably to that idea of the Psalmist, 92:9,

'Bring terror upon them, O Jehovah,
That the nations may acknowledge themselves to be but men.'

Na. 2:11,12,

'Where is the habitation of the devouring lions?
And that which was the feeding-place of the young lions?
Whether the devouring lions and the lionsess went,
And the whelp of the devouring lion; and none made them afraid,' &c.

The allegory, as Newcome remarks, is beyond measure beautiful. Where are the inhabitants of Nineveh, who were strong and rapacious like lions? See the intrepidity of the lion well illustrated by Bochart, Hieroz. b. 3, c. 2. Both Aristotle and Elian say that he never flies, but retires slowly. So also Homer describes him, Il. 17,108,

'So from the fold the unwilling lion parts,
Forced by loud clamors, and a storm of darts.
He flies indeed, but threatens as he flies,
With heart indignant, and rearing eyes.'

See also Pr. 28:1, and 30:30.
Is. 28:1, 'Woe to the lion of God, the city where David dwelt.'

Jerusalem is here denoted, and the terms used appear to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome all its enemies.

Jer. 47, 'The lion is come up from his thicket.'

By this is undoubtedly meant Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. See 50:17; and verse 6, where the same person is meant.

2 Ti. 4:17, 'I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.'

The general opinion is, that Nero is here meant, or rather his prefect, Aulus Casarion, to whom Nero committed the government of the city in his absence, with power to put whomsoever he pleased to death. So, when Tiberius died, Marsyas said to Agrippa, 'The lion is dead.' And so speaks Eusebius of Artaxerxes, 'Put a word into my mouth before the lion.' Est. 14:13.

That the same symbol should sometimes be applied to opposite characters, is no way surprising nor inconsistent, since different qualities may reside in the symbol, of which the good may be referred to one, the bad to another. Thus in the lion reside courage, and victory over antagonists. In these respects it may be, and is, employed as a symbol of Jesus Christ, who is called the Lion of the tribe of Judah, Re. 5:5; whose emblem the lion was; see Ge. 49:9; the whole Jewish polity being called a lion, on account of the singular firmness and ability of its government, which lasted till the time of Christ, and was merged in Him, who from that time became eminently the Lion of the tribe of Judah. The figure of a lion was carried on its standard, according to Mede and others, on which are said to have been inscribed these words:

'Arise, O Jehovah! let thine enemies be scattered, And let all them that hate thee be devoured.' See Glassius, Philol. Sacra, p. 750.

In the lion reside also fierceness and rapacity. In this point of view, it is used as a fit figure for Satan, 1 Pe. 5:8; for Nero, as above, and generally for wicked and rapacious conquerors and tyrants, as in many passages of Scripture, some of which have been already quoted.

The same takes place in regard to the unicorn, which, in Ps. 92:10, is applied to the pious; while in Ps. 22:21, it seems to be meant of the ungodly. The term leopard, also, is in one place used to denote the sound doctrine of the kingdom of heaven; in another, the false doctrine of the Pharisees. See Mat. 13:33, and 16:6.

LOCUST. In the sacred writings, the locust is every where the symbol of hostile armies: for these insects always appear in large companies or troops, and, from their destructive qualities, are considered as enemies. See Jer. 46:23.

'Cut down her forest, (i. e. her people or cities,) saith Jehovah, That it may not be found on searching: Altho' she surpass the forces in the old day; And they are without number.'

Na. 3:15, 'There shall the fire devour thee; The sword shall cut thee off; it shall devour thee as the locust. Increase thyself as the locust, Increase thyself as the numerous locust.'

Na. 3:17, 'Thy crowned princes are as the numerous locust, And thy capitals as the grasshopper; Which encompass the fences in the old day; But, when the sun ariseth, they depart, And thir place is not known where they are.'

See also De. 28:38, 42. Ps. 78:46, Am. 7:1. God made use of them as a hostile army, to execute his judgments; hence the first great plague on Egypt arose from their visitation. Ex. ch. 10. There they are represented as coming from the East, i. e. from Arabia, the neighboring country. And in Jud. 6:3-5, and 7:12, 'the children of the East,' meaning the Arabians, are compared to locusts for multitude, and as committing the same damage. See also 1 K. 4:30, where Solomon's wisdom is said to have excelled the wisdom of all 'the children of the East,' and all the wisdom of Egypt.

See also the invasion of the locusts described by Joel, in the first two chapters of his prophecy: from which place, and from that in Ex. ch. 10, the expressions in Re. ch. 9 are plainly borrowed.

The Eastern interpreters of dreams explain the appearance of locusts in a similar manner. 'The locust,' say they, 'generally refers to a multitude of enemies. They march, by divine command, like an army for the destruction of kingdoms. If any king or potentate shall dream of locusts coming to any country, in that place he may expect a multitude of powerful enemies.' And Rabbi Tauchum, on Jo. 14:6, says, 'It is no way unreasonable to affirm, that in the things which are related concerning the nature of locusts and their actions, there is a parabolic expression of the invasion of enemies, their multitude, and the desolation and ruin of that country.' Josephus, de Bello Jud. b. 5, c. 7, observes, in like manner, 'As, after locusts, we see the woods stripped of their leaves, so, in the rear of Simon's army, nothing but desolation remained.'

Locusts are said to be produced in the earth. Pliny says, 'Locustæ nascuntur in rimosis locis.' And this insect has its name in Hebrew from geb, grub, or grib, which signifies a pit, ditch, or pool. The mytic locusts in the Apocalypse are hence said to have proceeded from the pit or abyss. But the locusts of the Apocalypse seem to have some affinity to another creature, viz. the scorpion, and therefore may be termed scorpion-locusts: and their pain or torment is compared to that of a scorpion when he strikes a man.

The teeth of the locust are very strong and sharp, as those of a lion are. Pliny, as cited by Bochart, writes of the locusts, that they bite through every thing, and even the doors of houses. So that Jerome upon the place very justly cries out, 'What is more innumerable or stronger than the locusts, which no human industry can resist?' The same comparison we have in Re. 9:8, 'Their teeth were as the teeth of lions.'

The locust has a head very much resembling that of a horse; hence the Italians call them caricette, i. e. little horses. Joel notices this, 2:4; and St. John makes the same comparison, Re. 9:7. The Arabians describe them in the same manner: they say, 'The appearance of horses adorns their heads and countenance.' But both Joel and St. John may be considered not so much to refer to the natural appearance, as to the properties of the insect; namely, its fierceness and swift motion. Thus, the apostle says, not merely horses, but horses 'prepared unto battle,' furious and impatient for the war. Like Virgil's description —

'Nec vanos horret strepitum — Stare loci nesci, imbuti aridum, et frenis arida, Collocunque premens voluit sub naribus irem.' Georg. 3.

Their 'wings' also are mentioned as making a noise. Bochart says, that they may be heard at six miles distance; and that, when they are eating the fruits of the earth, the sound of them is like that of a flame driven by the wind. Joel likens it to the noise of chariots on the tops of the mountains, 2:5; and St. John uses nearly the same simile — 'The sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.' The natural locust has a very hard skin, in appearance like scales or armor. Hence Claudian thus describes them, Epigr. 33,

— 'Cognatus dorso duracis amictus; Armata natura cutem,'

Hence Joel says, 2:8, 'When they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.' And the apocalyptic locusts are described 'as having breast-plates like breast-plates of iron.'

As these symbolical locusts hurt men, Re. 9:4, which the natural locusts do not, forth they are, by injuring vegetation, we are at once led to infer, that they are to be understood of a class of persons, who resemble that insect only in some of its more remarkable qualities; such as number, voracity, and capacity of devastation, especially when they are portrayed as having, verse 7, 'human faces'; and, verse 8, 'hair like women'; 'golden coronets,' or turbans and the like; all which could only be affirmed of those whom the locust symbolizes.

The time of their continuance is said to be five months, the usual time of the appearance of these insects, which is only in four or five months of the year. They begin to appear in spring, about a month after the equinox, and are only seen at most during part of April, May, June, July, and August, and part of September. These locusts were accounted the most dreadful plague; inasmuch that those who were instrumental in delivering any nation from them, were repaid with divine honors. Thus the Ceteans named Hercules Coronipion, from coronop, a locust, and worshipped him under that character, because he drove away the locusts from them.

Almost all interpreters agree, that by the locusts in the Apocalypse, the Saracens are meant, and the rise of the Mahometan Empire and power, about the year 606. Mede, Dabuz, Lowman, and Bishop Newton, all agree on this subject; and, indeed, the coincidence is so striking between the prophetic description and the actual history, there is no resisting the evidence of it. But without determining positively in a matter respecting which so many have erred, it may be sufficient to remark, that could this point, of the application of the locusts to the Saracens, be well and satisfactorily ascertained, it would be of great importance, inasmuch as we should then have a landmark in the region of prophecy, from whence we could look either backward into the past, or prospectively into the future, as from a fixed date or era, so as to give greater confidence in the interpretation of the other mystic visions of the Apocalypse.

The points of coincidence may be seen well stated by Bishop Newton, and by Mede; but they would be too long for this place.

If, by the coronets or turbans, we are to understand the ensigns of regal power, we may with Mede suppose them to refer to the numerous nations subdued by the victories of the Saracens in an incredibly short space of time. For, in the space of eighty or ninety years, they had overrun and subjected Palestine, Syria, Armenia, nearly all the Lesser Asia, Persia, India, Egypt, Numidia, all Barbary as far as the river Niger, Portugal, and Spain. They afterwards added a great part of Italy, Sicily, Candia, Cyprus, and other islands of the Mediterranean Sea. So that they might well be said to be crushed locusts, from the multitude of kingdoms they subdued. They are said to continue five months; and as five months of thirty days make 150 days, reckoning each day for a year, so their continuance or duration was to be 150 years, which, if computed from A. D. 622, the year of Mahomet's death, would bring the period down to 772. But Mede reckons it from A. D. 830 to 980; and Dabuz, from 612 to 762, each assigning reasons for his mode of computation; for which see their works.

LOVE. To love, in Scripture, signifies to adhere or cleave to, as in Ge. 34:3, 'His soul cleaved unto Dinah, and he loved the damsel.' And so in De. 11:12, 30:20.

On the contrary, to hate, is to forsake. Thus, in Ro. 12:9, 'Abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good.'

In Is. 60:15, forsoaken and hated are put as synonymous.

Thus a man must hate his father for the sake of Christ; i. e. must forsake or leave him, to follow and obey Christ, when it stands in competition.

Thus God hated Esau, that is, passed by him, when He preferred before him his younger brother Jacob, in entitling Jacob to greater worldly privileges, and entering into a closer covenant with him. See Ma. 1:23. The meaning is, that God chose rather to make the posterity of Jacob a greater nation than the posterity of Esau. For the words Jacob and Esau are not to be understood of their persons, but of their offspring, as is evident from what was said of them by God to their mother, before they were born, Ge. 25:23, 'Two nations are in thy womb, (i. e. the Edomites and the Jews,) and two manner of people shall be separated from thy bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other; and the elder shall serve the younger.'

M.

MANNA. The miraculous food with which God fed his people Israel during forty years in the wilderness.

In Ps. 78:25, it is called angels' food in our version; but this is absurd. The word angels there signifies strong ones, and by Durell is translated acra, as in Ps. 22:12. 50:13. 68:36. Is. 34:7. Jer. 50:11. He therefore renders it thus:

'Every one ate the flesh of oxen; He sent them venison (or victims) in plenty.'

But Parkhurst, with more propriety, renders it 'bread of the strong ones;' meaning by it the material heavens, for in the preceding sentence it is called 'corn of the heavens.' See his note on Abir, Heb. Lex. p. 4.

Manna is the emblem or symbol of immortality. Re. 2:17, 'I will give him to eat of the hidden manna; i. e. the true bread of God, which came down from heaven, referring to the words of Christ, in Jn. 6:51, a much greater instance of God's favor, than feeding the Israelites with manna in the wilderness. It is called hidden, or laid up, in allusion to that which was laid up in a golden vessel in the holy of holies of the tabernacle. Comp. Ex. 16:33,34, and He. 9:4.

It is in a subordinate sense only, that what dropped from the clouds, and was sent for the nourishment of the body, still mortal, could be called the 'bread of heaven,' being but a type of that 'bread which descended from the heaven of heavens, for nourishing the immortal and unto eternal life, and which is, therefore, in the sublimest sense, the bread of heaven.' The original manna was corruptible, and they who ate thereof died; but those who partake of this shall never hunger, but shall live forever. The immortality which it procures, transcends all imagination.

In Lu. 14:15, a person is recorded as saying, 'Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God; probably in allusion to the manna. To eat bread is a well-known Hebrew idiom for to share in a repast, whether it be at a common meal, or at a sumptuous feast.

MAN or SIN — SON OF PERDITION — LAWLESS ONE. 2 Th. 2:3, &c.

The figurative description of an eminently impious and wicked power, whose rise was to be contemporary with the 'apostasy,' or general defection from God and from genuine Christianity. He is called the son of sin, as being eminently wicked; the son of perdition, as being destined to certain destruction; the unless one, as setting himself up above all law, man and divine.

He is said to oppose God, as being peculiarly an adversary to truth and righteousness; and exalt himself above God, as being guilty of the most impious arrogance, as proudly raising himself above all institutions of religious worship, by assuming to alter and set aside all the divine appointments of religion and worship.

He is said to sit in the temple of God, as if he were God; i. e. he shall seize the primacy or overeignty of the churches of Christ, and usurp the authority of the King of Zion. But properly, instead of sit, it should be he seeth himself, denoting his insolent and violent intrusion of himself into God's church as lawgiver and ruler.

Showing himself, or rather 'publicly declaring himself' that he is a God; i. e. impiously assuming divine powers and privileges, and bragging that submission and obedience in matters pertaining to the conscience, which are due only to God.

An event, or order of things, is said to restrain his appearance, and he could not be revealed till that was removed. All the fathers considered this to mean the imperial power of Rome, which then maintained its own sovereignty, and prevented the usurpation alluded to. See Tertullian's Apology, and his treatise on the Resurrection, where he says, 'until he be taken out of the way, — who, but the Roman empire, which, being dispersed into ten kings, shall introduce Antichrist,' ch. xiv.

The poets and Roman writers in general having flattered the Cæsars with the eternal duration of their empire, (see Virgil, Æn. l. i. 81, &c.) and given to Rome the title of the eternal city, it would not have been safe for Paul to have spoken more openly on this subject, whatever he might say to the Thessalonians in private, in explanation of his meaning. And therefore he says, 'Ye know what withholdings,' &c.

This 'mystery of iniquity,' or concealed wickedness, was even then in operation, and was exerting itself covertly, till he who restrained it, 'the imperial government,' was taken out of the way. The expression 'taken out of the way,' perhaps importing the violent deaths by which many of the Roman emperors perished, and the dreadful struggles and convulsions which preceded the dissolution of the empire itself.

It is further said, that the Lord will consume; i. e. gradually destroy this lawless one, or usurping and tyrannical power, by the spirit or breath of his mouth; i. e. by the word of his gospel, and the prevalence of the doctrine of Christ, which should supersede the errors, and expose the impostures of Antichrist.

And destroy him, or render ineffectual, by the wisdom of his coming; i. e. by breaking down his authority, reducing his influence, and bringing him to a state of inactivity and impotence.

The coming of the lawless one is described as being according to the operation of Satan; i. e. visibly and imperceptibly — yet effectually by the use of false miracles, specious pretences, counterfeit signs, and all the apparatus of imposture, or, as Paul expresses it, with every kind of wrighteous deception; meaning, that he would scruple no arts or delusions that might support and perpetuate his own usurpation.

Those who are deceived by him, are said to be those that perish, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And, therefore, God abandoned them to strong delusion, so as to give credit to a lie. And having wilfully banished the truth from their minds, they rendered themselves liable to the righteous condemnation of God, as persons who used made iniquity their choice, and who preferred error to truth, as being most favorable to the indulgence of their criminal passions.

No man of understanding can be at a loss for the right application of this portion of Scripture, that it cannot reasonably be expounded of one or two particular deceivers, who arose, appeared, and perished; but of a power of great extent and of considerable duration, whose rise was gradual, his assumption of overeignty progressive, and whose downfall may occupy a period proportioned to his rise. But see Whitby, MacKnight, and Chandler in particular, and the commentators in general.

MARRIAGE is symbolically used to signify a state, and reason or cause of great joy and happiness. A man is not perfect till marriage; here is something till then wanting to make him complete in his circumstances, according to the divine institution. Gen. 2:18.

Therefore marriage by the Greeks was called εὖδος, perfection. And a bride, in Hebrew, is called קַדוּשָׁה, here, that is, a perfect one, from קדש, to perfect or consummate.

Wife, according to the Indian Interpreter, Is. 1:2, is the symbol of the power and authority of her husband; and as he dreams of seeing her well or ill dressed, so he shall meet with joy or affliction.

The church of God, under the Old Testament, is sometimes spoken of as the spouse of God, in terms borrowed from the marriage covenant. She is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate; she is exhorted to rejoice, in Is. 54:1-6, on the reconciliation of her husband, and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family.

The same union is hinted at by the apostle, in writing to the Ephesians, 5:32, as subsisting between Christ and the church.

See also Is. 62:5, and 2 Co. 2:2, where Paul says, 'For I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.'

In the visions of John, a period is spoken of, when the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his bride hath made herself ready. Re. 19:7. As marriages were used to be celebrated with great joy, the marriage of the Lamb with his church is a fit emblem to show the state of prosperity and happiness to which God will raise it, after all its sufferings for the sake of truth and righteousness.

MARSHES. There is not much said of these in the Scriptures; but they appear to be considered as the emblems of barrenness. They are in their own nature infertile and insalubrious, resembling the Dead Sea, or sea of Sodom, that dismal example of divine justice; and in that sense may be viewed as representing those who, notwithstanding the motions of God's Spirit, and the means used for their improvement, are utterly unproductive of good.

In Ez. 47:11, it is said, 'As for the marshes and pits, they shall not be healed; i. e. they shall remain filled with salt water, &c.' The allegorical sense is, that some shall reject the gospel, and some shall receive it without obeying it.

Italy and Spain, in Europe, and many other countries throughout the world, may be viewed as in this marshy state, a state of obduracy, error, and spiritual death. See Vitruvius de Paludibus.

MEASURE. To measure and to divide are the same; and both signify to go about to take possession, after the division. Hence a lot, or division, or inheritance, are all one; because the Israelites got possession of the promised land by division, measure, and lot.

And to divide the spoil is to get a great booty or victory, because division of the spoils is a consequence of the other. See Nu. 24:17. 33:51. Job. 1:16. 13:6. Is. 9:3. 53:12.

To mete out is the same. Thus, Ps. 65:5, 'I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth,' signifies an entire possession after a victory, which God had promised to David.

So, in Is. 18:2, a nation that is meted out and trodde down, is a nation overcome by its enemies, and quite subdued; so that its possessions are divided and possessed by the conquerors.

So when, in Jos. 24:3, God says, 'I have divided unto you by lot those nations that remain,' what is this but to say, that God had put them in possession of their lands? So, in Zech. 2:2, to measure Jerusalem, is again to take possession of it, to rebuild it; or at least to repair that, and rebuild the temple. See also Am. 7:17.

The same notion is also in the heathen authors. Thus, in Horace, immetata jugera, lands unmeasured, b. 3, Od. 24, v. 12, signify, not possessed by any propriety to them, but common; whence the fruits of such lands are called by the poet, libera, free to any one to take. See also Virgil, Geor. b. 1, v. 126, 127.

MILK and HONEY. The emblems of fertility.

Bechart, Hieroz. p. 2, b. 4, c. 12, observes, that this phrase occurs about twenty times in the Scriptures, and that it is an image frequently used in the classics, as in Euripides, Bacch. 142, thus translated by Wodhull:

'Rills of milk, and rills of wine,
Molten the enchanted land;
For him the bee's mactronous fragrance streams,
And Syrian frankincense perfumes his shrine.'

Josephus represents Galilee as wholly under culture, and every where fruitful; as throughout abounding in pastures, planted with all kinds of trees, and inciting, by the good quality of the land, those who are least disposed to the labor of tillage. See also Shaw's Travels, and Maundrell's.

Milk sometimes denotes the unadulterated word of God, as in 1 Pe. 2:2, compared with Is. 55:1.

It also signifies the elementary parts or rudiments of the Christian doctrine. 1 Co. 3:2. He. 5:12, 13.

MOON. The moon has generally been considered by divines to be a symbol of the church of God, but on what grounds it is difficult to discover. It would seem as if the notion had been taken up principally on the supposition that Solomon's Song has a secondary or mystical sense, representing the union of Christ with the church, though neither the name of God nor of Christ is once mentioned in it, nor is it ever quoted, or even alluded to, in the New Testament. In Song 6:10, the bride is said to be 'fair as the moon;' but that the church is that 'bride,' is nowhere affirmed. Were it otherwise, the sun also might be supposed to be an emblem of the church; for the same bride is, in the same verse, said to be 'clear as the sun.'

Even were it so, the passage amounts to no more than a simple comparison, 'fair as the moon;' in the same manner as Asahel 'was light of foot as a roe,' 2 S. 9:18. Some divines, however, determined to find the church every where, fix on this passage among others, and inform us, that the church is so called, because of her brightness, which she derives from Christ, 'the Sun of righteousness;' as the moon does her light from the natural sun; and to intimate, that the church, like the moon, may have her eclipses, and be in darkness for a time. But if the woman mentioned in Re. 12:1 be intended to represent the church, which is the opinion of most interpreters, then she is described as having the moon under her feet, which, in other words, would be treading upon herself, — a picture not very natural.

The fathers first led the way to the interpretation of the moon as a symbol of the church, as has been proved from their writings by several authors.

The moon has also been considered to be the emblem of the human judgment or intellect, in Ec. 12:2; but erroneously; for Solomon is there merely describing the general condition of old age, under the figure of a climate where the sun seldom appears, where the sky is overspread with clouds, and heavy rains are frequent.

As a proof how easily men of fertile imaginations can find a resemblance anywhere, I may be allowed to quote the following from a Danish author: 'The moon,' says he, 'is the symbol of the church; for,

1. The moon is raised above the earth, and the church hath her citizenship in heaven. Phil. 3:20.

2. The moon is a dark body in itself, and borrows its light from the sun; in like manner the church has no light but what she receives from the Savior.

3. The nearer the moon is to the sun, the less brilliant she appears; so the more the rays of the divine light are thrown upon the church, the more her misery and her poverty are discovered.

4. The moon is continually revolving, and is called by the poets 'the wandering moon,' luna vaga; so the church militant is a pilgrim and stranger, and has no abiding-place here.

5. The moon has her different phases or aspects, waxing and waning in turn; so the church increases in times of peace, and decreases in seasons of persecution, in numbers and stability, while her purity and soundness are reversely affected.'

And so forth; for the grounds of comparison are multiplied.

If it be asked, Of what, then, is the moon symbolical? the answer is, the sun, moon, and stars, denote different degrees of rank, power, and authority, in a family or state. Thus, in Joseph's dream, the sun represented Jacob the head, the moon his wife, as the next in order, and the stars his sons. When spoken of a kingdom, the sun is the symbol of the king himself, and the moon of the next to him in power, whether it be the queen, the prince royal, or the prime minister. If kings are sometimes called stars, like the king of Babylon, Is. 14:17, it is when they are not compared with their own nobles or princes, but with other kings.

In Re. 8:12, it is said, 'the third part of the moon was smitten.'

In the figurative language, the darkening of any of the heavenly bodies denotes a defect in government, a downfall of power, a revolt, or political extinction. And if the pagan Roman empire be here meant, then it is a third portion of the primary powers denoted by the sun, and of the secondary powers signified by the moon, that is to be extinguished. See Jer. 13:16. Is. 13:10, 11. Ez. 32:7, 8. This is supposed to have been fulfilled between the years 536 and 556, when Belshazzar and the Goths alternately besieged and took Rome, and reduced it to a mere duchy.

Re. 12:1, 'a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet.'

This is understood to be a symbolical representation of the church, clothed with sunbeams, expressive of high honor and dignity; and standing on the moon, as being above the low condition of this sublunary world.

MOTHER. Father and mother are words which, in all languages, may figuratively signify author or producer of a thing.

A city which has great dominions under it, and consequently several other cities, is frequently called a mother, in respect of those cities, which are called by analogy, her daughters. See Ex. ch. 23. Ho. 2:2,5. 4:5. Is. 50:1.

A city may be called a mother in respect of the inhabitants, as in Is. 49:23. and therefore, in the symbolical language, mother is explained of the patris, or country, or city. See Suetonius in Jul. Cæs. § 7; and Artemidorus, b. 8, c. 82.

See 2 S. 90:19. Jos. 17:16. Nu. 91:25. Jud. 11:26, &c.

The name is sometimes transferred to signify the New Testament church, as in Ga. 4:26, which should have been rendered, 'But the Jerusalem, which is from above, represents, or corresponds to, the free woman, who is the mother of us all,' i. e. of all Christians; according to the allegory in which the bond-woman answers to the Jews, the natural descendants of Abraham, whose capital is Jerusalem on this earth.

In Na. 3:8, where populous No or No Ammon is mentioned, the inhabitants are called, in verse 10, her young children. Some have supposed No to mean Alexandria, the great emporium of Egypt; and the Chaldee and Vulgate have rendered accordingly. But Alexandria was not built at the time when Jeremiah prophesied; and it does not appear that there had been before any considerable city, at least, standing on the spot, which the founder made the object of his choice. No was more probably Thebes, which was called Theopis, on account of the temple of Jupiter Ammon, who was worshipped there in a distinguished manner.

Re. 17:5, 'the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth;' i. e. a chief promoter of idolatry and superstition, by whose authority it was propagated among the nations.

Ex. 16:4, 'Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite;' i. e. their degenerate and idolatrous conduct was suitable to such a descent. Jn. 8:44. It is the language of indignation and reproof, like

'Dürle genait te canthion horems Caucasian.'
Zn. 4, 266.

See Newcome in loc.

Ex. 11:21, 'The parting of the way, at the head of two ways,' i. e. in Hebrew, the mother, because out of it these two ways arise as daughters.

On our Lord's words, in Mat. 12:48, 'Who is my mother?' see Erasmus's excellent paraphrase.

MOUNTAIN. The governing part of the political world appears under symbols of different species, being variously represented, according to the various kinds of allegories.

If the allegory be fetched from the heavens, then the luminaries denote the governing part; if from an animal, the head or horns; and if from the earth, a mountain or fortress; and in this case the capital city or residence of the governor is taken for the supreme, by which it happens that these mutually illustrate each other.

So a capital city is the head of the political body; the head of an ox is the fortress of the animal; mountains are the natural fortresses of the earth, and therefore a fortress or capital city, though set in a plain, level ground, may be called a mountain.

Thus head, mountain, hill, city, horn, and king, are in a manner synonymous terms to signify a kingdom, or monarchy, or republic, united under one government, only with this difference, that it is to be understood in different respects; for the head represents it in respect of the capital city; mountain or hill, in respect of the strength of the metropolis, which gives law to, or is above, and commands the adjacent territories, and the like.

Thus, concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, Isaiah says, 2:2,

'It shall come to pass in the latter days,
The mountain of the house of Jehovah shall be established on the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills, and all ye lions shall flow unto it.'

And 11:9, 'They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain; that is, in all the kingdom of the Messiah, which shall then reach all over the world; for it follows, 'the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord.'

So the whole Assyrian monarchy, or Babylon, for all its dominions, is called a mountain in Zech. 4:7, and Jer. 51:25, in which last place the Targum has a fortress; just as Virgil, in his Æneid, b. 6, v. 783, calls the seven hills of Rome, arces, or fortresses, though there was but one, the Capitol — 'Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces.'

Thus also, in De. 3:25, 'The stone that smote the image, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth;' that is, the kingdom of the Messiah, having destroyed the four monarchies, became a universal monarchy, as it is plainly made out in verses 44,45.

In this view, then, a mountain is the symbol of a kingdom, or of a capital city with its dominions, or of a king, which is the same. Mountains are frequently used to signify all places of strength of what kind soever, and to whatsoever use applied; mountains being difficult of access to an enemy, and overawing and commanding the country round about, being properly qualified, both to secure what is on them, and to protect and govern what is about them. See Jer. 3:23.

Among the heathens, persons of great note and eminence were buried in or under mountains; tombs were erected over them in honor of their memory; and by degrees their souls became the objects of worship.

This gave rise to a custom of building temples and places of worship upon mountains. And though these temples were not always, strictly speaking, the very monuments of the heroes deceased, yet the bare invocation was supposed to call the soul thither, and to make the very place a sepulchral monument, as Turnebus proves from Virgil, Æn. b. 3, v. 67, and b. 6, v. 505. And therefore Servius on Virgil's Æneid, b. 3, p. 701, observes, that human souls are by sacrifice turned into deities. For which see Lycophron's Cassandra, v. 927, 1123, and from v. 1193 to 1140.

The said temples were also built like forts or towers, as appears from Jud. 9:45,48,49, where the temple of the god Berith is called in the original, 'the tower of the house, or the tower-house of the god Berith.'

They were likewise places of asylum, and beyond all, were looked upon as the fortresses and defenders of the worshippers, by reason of the presence of the false deities, and of the relics of deceased men kept therein within the sanctuaries.

Thus, in Euripides, Hæc. v. 1030, &c., we find, that the heroes in their tombs were esteemed as saviors and defenders of the people.

Tully, de Nat. Deor. lib. 1, §n.; Clemens Alexandrinus, Protrep. p. 13; Arnobius adv. Gentes, b. 6, and Lactantius de f. Rel. 1, c. 15, give examples of dead men worshipped, upon the supposition that the presence of their relics fixed the demon to the place, and protected those for whom they had a kindness when alive.

Hence the Spartans in distress were by an oracle directed to get the bones of Orestes; and the Athenians in the like case were commanded to find the bones of Theseus. Herod. 2, § 67; Pausan. Lacon. p. 81.

Pausanias having observed, that the bones of Aristomenes, the Messenian hero, were brought to the new Messene, and there gave out oracles, prodigies, gives a reason for it, brought from the immortality of the soul, by which he supposes, that souls in the separate state keep still their thoughts and affections as before, and by consequence assist their votaries in suitable enterprises; on which account their relics were thought to do wonders.

So the shield of that hero was thought to have helped the Theban army against the Lacedæmonians.

This notion may be traced up as high as Hesiod, Op. h. l. v. 121. It was the foundation of all idolatry, and was improved by the supposition that without the relics, as was before observed, the invocation with sacrifices might turn human souls into deities.

Upon the accounts now given, mountains were the forts of paganism, and, therefore, in several parts of Scripture, mountains signify the idolatrous temples and places of worship; as in Ez. 6:2-6. Jer. 2:23. Mi. 4:1.

And thus mountains, by the rule of analogy, may be properly used in respect of the monasteries and churches of the Christian church when corrupted by the introduction of saints and images. The aforesaid notion of the heathens concerning dead heroes was soon entertained by the new converts to Christianity in relation to the martyrs or their relics. And the fury of the people at last was so great, that they raised up altars in every place to the martyrs without relics, helping out the deficiency with dreams and revelations. By which all their altars are become tombs of the dead, as were those of the pagans, and their churches the houses of their protectors and saviors; all the difference being, that they have taken the martyrs or heroes of the church instead of those of paganism.

It is also observable, that, anciently, monasteries were built upon mountains, and built like forts. Those in the Greek church were certainly so, as appears by several authors, as Cyril of Alexandria, and St. Chrysostom, who therefore calls the monks 'the dwellers on the mountains.' On Mount Athos, there are still twenty-two monasteries, and about 6000 monks in them. In this, they are conformable to their pattern, the Therapeutics of Philo, who dwelt upon a mountain, and whose cells were called monasteries.

In the Ethiopic language, the same word, viz. dobary, signifies a mountain and a monastery. The very etymology of the word helps out the signification of the symbol. For dob, a mountain, comes from daber, to command, subdue, and govern. So, in military language, mountains are said to command the places about them; and accordingly the monasteries were the forts or mountains of Popery, and so many authors have styled them. See further illustrations in Daubuz.

Selden and Porocke think that Basil-Pew, mentioned in Ho. 9:10, was so called from the mountain on which he was worshipped. See Nu. 25:3, and 23:28. Ps. 106:28.

So Jupiter had the additional name of Olympus, and Mercury of Cyllenius. Ez. 6:2, 'Set thy face towards the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them.' See De. 12:2. Jer. 2:20. 3:6. 18:6.

Philip, second king of Macedon, in his expedition against Sparta, sacrificed to the gods on each of the hills, one of which was called Olympus, and the other Evra. Polyb. b. 5, p. 372.

Cyrus, just before his death, offered sacrifice to Jupiter, the sun, and the other gods, upon the mountains. Cyp. b. 8, p. 647. ed. Hatch.

Jupiter speaks of Hector as sacrificing to him on the summits of Ida. See Il. 22, 171.

Great disorders and commotions, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are expressed in the prophetic style, by carrying or casting mountains into the midst of the sea. See Ps. 46:3.

'Therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed,
And though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea.'

It is said, in Re. 16:20, 'And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.' The phrase is taken from those mighty earthquakes, in which every thing is thrown into confusion, and even mountains are swallowed up, or change their forms. See Re. 6:14.

These mystic mountains, in the Apocalypses, mean kingdoms and states, which were no longer found, because overturned to make way for the kingdom of Christ, mentioned by Daniel, which was to fill the whole earth.

When David says, Ps. 30:7, 'Lord, by thy favor Thou hast made my mountain to stand strong,' he means, the stability of his kingdom.

Vitrings, in commenting on Is. 2:14, 'And upon all the high mountains,' &c., has these words: 'Hoc est, ad subvertenda regna et republicas, sine societate majores et minores, que sibi limitibus circumscripte, et probe sint confirmate, sit in mundo cunctarum, celeberrima fama amplitudinis, potentie, auctoritatis, adeo ut difficilis adactar, destruantur ac loco moveantur. Vere gerunt figuram et emblemata montium et collium.'

MOUTH, according to the onomastic, denotes the house of the party; and by analogy, the teeth are the servants of the household.

The mouth also signifies the words that proceed out of it, which, in the sacred style, are the same as commands and actions, because they imply the effects of the thoughts; words or commands being the means used to communicate the thoughts and decrees to those that are to execute them.

Hence, for a person or thing to come out of the mouth of another, signifies to be constituted and commanded to become an agent or minister under a superior power. Thus:

Re. 16:13, 'I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragons, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.'

Re. 16:14, 'For they are the spirits of devils working miracles,' &c.

Re. 1:16, 'Out of his mouth went a sharp sword.'

Re. 11:4, 'He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth.'

Re. 12:15, 'The serpent cast out of his mouth water.'

Re. 9:19, 'Their power is in their mouths, and in their tails.'

Re. 11:5, 'If any hurt them, fire shall proceed out of their mouth.'

The Word of God, or the word that proceeds out of his mouth, signifies sometimes the actions of God's providence, his commands, whereby He rules the world, and brings all things to his purpose; and sometimes that Divine Person, or emanated substance of Himself, who executes his commands as a minister, and, by a metonymy of the abstract for the concrete, usual in holy writ, and, in the Eastern nations, is called the Word of God.

MYRTLE. The myrtle-tree was an emblem of peace.

is mentioned in the following passages—
8:15, Is. 41:19, 55:13. Zech. 13.
The Hebrew term is Hades, from which dassah, the original name of Esther. The of the Chaldee Targum on this passage is remarkable: 'They called her Hodes or dassah, because she was just, and the just those that are compared NOMY to myrtle.
The Jews had a proverb, 'The myrtle standing among nettles, is still called a myrtle'; saying, that a godly man living amongst the icked is still a godly man, like Lot in Sodom Julius celebrates it, El. 62.

—Bona cum bona
Nuptiæ sine virgo,
Florida velut entes
Myrtus Asia ramula;

Lucian admires its beauty, in Amor. v. 4, spinæ, &c., 'the myrtle, and several other which excel in beauty.'

On which account Pausanias says it was dedicated to Venus, along with the rose.

And hence Virgil has, Ecl. 7,

Formosa myrtus Veneri, sus laurea Phœbo.

In external beauty and fragrance, it is considered to be a fit emblem of the Christian arch, as adorned with the various graces of Spirit.

The myrtle is a lowly and tender shrub,
therefore the more resembles the saints.
Hence applies to it the epithet fragili, frail;
Virgil calls it tener, tender. And Aristophanes terms it ῥαψοδία, myrtus, virgin-myrtle. It is very fragrant; hence Horace,
2, Od. 15:

Myrtus, et omnis copia barium,
Spargebat odor, et odor Fertilibus.

And Athenæus, lib. 15, Deipnos., observes, that the Egyptian myrtle is acknowledged to cel all others in the sweetness of its fragrance, as Theophrastus writes.

And Ovid, lib. 3, Art. Amor. v. 690,

Rosæ maris et lauri, nigraque myræ oleus.

The myrtle is an evergreen. So the Jews, in their Midrash, say of Esther: 'The name of her is Hadasah, or myrtle; for, as the myrtle never withers, winter or summer, so a righteous always flourishes both in this world and that which is to come.'

It was used at festivals, as Horace remarks,
1, Od. 4:

Nunc decet aut viridit nitidum caput impediare myrto,
Aut flore, terræ quem ferunt solent.

And Josephus mentions, that at the feast of bernice they carried branches of myrtle in their hands.

N.

NAKEDNESS signifies sin or folly. Thus, in Ge. 3:7, it is taken for sin in general. And Ex. 32:25, and Ex. 16:36, and 2 Ch. 28:19, is idolatry. And so elsewhere in the Scriptures all kinds of vice, but idolatry in particular, come under the notion of Albiness, or akadness, or sorcs. And therefore to be in the highest degree naked, is to be guilty of idolatry.

Nakedness signifies also guilt, shame, poverty, or misery, as being the consequence of unishment of sin, and of idolatry in particular, a crime which God never leaves unpun-ished. Thus, in Jer. 49:10, 'I have made Sion bare,' &c. signifies the destruction of Sion, God having exposed them naked and effenceless to the invaders. So, in Is. 47:3, Thy nakedness shall be uncovered; even thy shame shall be seen.

interpreted in the next line by

I will take full vengeance, neither will I suffer man to interfere with Me.'

Other words, Babylon should be humbled, and made a slave.

The Indian interpreter explains this symbol of distress, poverty, and disgrace.

The nakedness of enemies is explained by the interpreters of omens, as signifying, that by one discovery of their secrets, a way would be made to vanquish them in the end. See a remarkable instance in Procopius, quoted by Lamb.

The nakedness of a land, Ge. 42:9, signifies the weak and ruined parts of it, where the country lies most open and exposed to danger.
There is an admonition in Re. 16:15, couched in terms which include this symbol. 'Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame;' i. e. let all who would faithfully persevere, watch over themselves, to maintain their purity and integrity, when Christ comes they be exposed to disgrace, and have no covering for their sin and folly.

NAME. The name of a person or thing, according to the Hebrew style, frequently imports the quality or state thereof. Thus, in

Ru. 1:20, 'And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi,' i. e. pleasant, 'but call me Mara,'
i. e. bitter, 'for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.'

And thus, when it is said, in Is. ch. 9, 'He shall be called Immanuel,' the meaning is, that the Son there spoken of shall be God with us, dwelling amongst us. And so in Lu. 1:32,
'He shall be called the Son of the Highest,' is,
he shall be the Son of the Highest.

And thus, in Thucydides, b. 5, § 9, 'To be called the allies of the Lacedæmonians,' is the same as to be their allies, and have effectually the honor and advantage of that title.

Agreeably to this, a new name signifies a new quality or state,—a change of the former condition; as in Is. 62:2,

And thou shalt be called by a new name,
Which the mouth of Jehovah shall fix upon thee.

Hence the custom of changing names upon any remarkable change of condition. So, on account of the new covenant made with God, Abraham and Sarah received those new names from God himself; so Jacob was named Israel; so Joseph had a new name given him by Pharaoh; and Daniel another by the king of Babylon. So our Savior changed
Simon's name for Peter; and the primitive Christians took a new name at their baptism.

To be called by the name of any one, signifies to belong to, to be the property of, or to be in subjection to, that person whose name is called upon the other, as in Ge. 48:16.

Thus, to be called by the name of God is to be accounted his servant, to be appropriated to Him, and separated from the heathen world, as in De. 28:10, 2 Ch. 7:14, Ac. 15:17.

So, because a woman by marriage becomes subject and the property of her husband, therefore, in Is. 4:1, she is said to have the name of her husband called upon her.

And thus, when God had submitted all creatures on earth to Adam, in token of their subjection, and to give him possession of the gift, God brought them to him to be named.

So David, to express that God is the Lord as well as Maker of the stars, says, Ps. 147:4,
'He telleth the number of the stars; He calleth them all by their names.'

Thus masters gave names to their slaves; and these, that it might be publicly known to whom they belonged, were branded in their foreheads with the names or marks of their masters. See Potter's Grecian Antiq. vol. i.
p. 65; Martial, Plautus, &c.

And, for the same reason, soldiers were branded in the hand with the name or character of their general. And, on the same account, it was customary to stigmatize the worshippers and votaries of some of the gods.

To call by name implies a superiority to examine and blame the actions of the persons called. The phrase is thus used in Ignatius's Epistles, and in Virgil's Æneid, b. 12, v. 759.

Names of men are sometimes taken for the men themselves, as in Ac. 1:15, 'the number of the names;' i. e. the number of the men.

And thus in Virgil, Silvius, Albanum nomen, means, Silvius, a man of Albania.

The origin of this expression is to be deduced from the public registers of the names of citizens, which were very carefully kept by the Greeks and Romans, and from the exact account of genealogies among the Jews; and from the diptychs or matricula used in the primitive church, in which were registered the names of all the faithful. Hence the expression, to blot out a man's name, signifies to reject or cast him out from enjoying any longer the privileges of a citizen or Christian, by blotting his name out of the public register or matricula.

Am. 6:1, 'which are named chief of the nations,' &c.

The Hebrew word implies an allusion to the custom of marking a name or character by punctures. See Lowth on Is. 44:5. They call themselves, not after their religious ancestors, but after the chief of the idolatrous nations, with whom they intermarry contrary to their law.

'Persons of name' were 'the known ones,' or principal men, to whom the house of Israel came for justice, and to pay court. None but men of note seem to have been thus distinguished.

A man of name is a man of renown; so David is called on account of his victories. 2 S. 7:9, 1 S. 18:7, 2 S. 19:28. And the Roman generals used to take names from their victories, as Africanus, Asiaticus, Macedonicus, and the like; and sometimes from things done at home for the public good, as Cicero was saluted Pater Patriæ, father of his country, and Augustus afterwards.

The word shem, name, denotes simply an object of worship or invocation. Hence, shem, the name, signifies the object of worship to Israel. Le. 24:11. And so in Ex. 20:25, when God says, 'I record my name,' the meaning is,

I choose a place where I require to be worshipped, wherein I will show my glory and power, and hear the prayers of them that invoke Me.

Thus the declaration of God, in Ex. 3:15, when He first appeared to Moses, 'This is my name forever, and this is my memorial to all generations,' respects his worship. It is that name by which He is to be remembered, and distinguished from all false objects; for the word memorial is a term of the rituals, Le. 2:2.
Therefore, when God forbids Israel, in Ex.
23:13, even to make mention of the names of other gods, He forbids to worship them, or to commemorate any of their actions. For God calls Himself, Ex. 34:14, a jealous God; in the Septuagint, ἡλὸς ὀφθαλμοῦ, a jealous name, or object of worship. It was on this account that Moses inquired after the name of God, when He appeared to him. Ex. 3:13. And in Jud.
13:17, Manouah says to the angel, 'What is thy name, that when thy sayings come to pass, we may do thee honor?' an expression originating probably in this, that when God appeared by vision, dream, or miracle, to the patriarchs, they noted the place, and commemorated the event by some solemn acts of devotion, and the imposition of a name, as in Ge. 12:7, 8, 13: 4-18, 28:18, 19. And so in regard to false deities; wherever they were supposed to have performed any thing memorable, or wherever they were understood to preside and to favor their votaries, there a monument was raised, and the name invoked with suitable solemnities.
See an instance in Pap. Statius, b. 4, v.
664.

Hence it comes, that not only among the Jewish authors, but also the Gentile, to name is the same as to invoke in divine worship.

And thus, to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is to be baptized into their worship, as the one God.

NIGHT. The time for sleep. 1 Th. 5:7,
'They that sleep, sleep in the night;' whence sleep, among the mythologists, is called 'the son of Night.' Hippocrates, in his prognostics, says, 'It is proper to be awake in the day, and to sleep in the night.' And Virgil, Æn. 8, calls sleep domum vocis opacæ, the gift of dark night.
And Valer. Flaccus, Argon. b. 5,

Nox hominum genus et duræ micrat laboræ,
Retulcat fœcis opacis silentia rebus.

Homer thus expresses it, Odyssey. b. 3, v. 334,

'The lamp of day is quenched beneath the deep,
And soft approach the balmy hours of sleep;
Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast,
Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest.'

The whole term of human life is frequently in Scripture called a day; see Job. b. 14, and other places. But in one passage it is called night; Ro. 13:12, 'The night is far spent, (that is, the time of ignorance and profeness,) the day is at hand.' Or, as the same apostle says, Ep. 5:8, 'Ye were once darkness; now are ye light in the Lord.'

Night, being the time of darkness, the image and shadow of death, in which the beasts of prey go forth to devour, symbolically signifies a time of adversity and affliction, in which men prey upon each other, and the stronger tyrannize over the weaker. Thus, Is. 21:12,
'Watchman, what of the night?' an inquiry
how long their captivity was to last.

Zech. 14:6, 7,
'And there shall be one day,
(It is known to Jehovah);
It shall be neither day nor night,
But at eventide there shall be light.'

See Re. 21:23, and 22:5—meaning, that there shall be no vicissitude of day and night, but a constant light; and this signifies, symbolically, that there shall be no vicissitude of peace and war, but a constant state of quiet and happiness.

Dehnbuz quotes, from Herbelot, to show the notion of the Arabians: 'In the Hunajounnameh it is said, he that has done justice in this night has built himself a house for the next day,—meaning, says Herbelot, by this night, the present life of this world, which is nothing but darkness; and by the next day, the future life, which is to be a clear day for good men.'

The night is plainly put for a time of ignorance and helplessness in Mt. 3:6—

'Wherefore there shall be night to you, so that ye shall have no vision;
And there shall be darkness to you, so that ye shall have no divination;
And the sun shall go down upon the prophets,
And the day shall be dark upon them.'

The paraphrase of Erasmus on 1 Th. 5:7, deserves to be noticed: 'Dies metuendus iis;
&c.: i. e. the day of final judgment is to be dreaded by those who, blinded by their vices, lead a sort of nocturnal life; but ye, brethren, need not be afraid lest it should overtake you suddenly; for all you, who follow Christ, do not belong to the kingdom of darkness, but to the kingdom of light and of God. Henceforward, if we wish not to be overtaken, let us not sleep, as others do, who know not the light of Christ, but let us watch and be sober, always circumspect, that nothing may be admitted through inadvertence into the mind, which may offend either God or man, &c.

In Jn. 9:4, night is put for death. So Horace, b. 1, Ode 4, 'Jam te premet nox.'—Soon will the night o'ertake my friend. And, Ode 28, line 15, 'Omnes una manet nox.'—One night remains for all.

Is. 15:1, the words 'in the night' are understood by Vitringer to mean suddenly, unexpectedly; but there is some doubt about the correctness of the present reading. See Lowth's note.

O.

OAK. The symbol of men of high rank and power.

In Is. 3:13, 'the oaks of Bashan' are used, in the way of metaphor, for kings, princes, and the like. See Zech. 11:2, where, under the image of oaks, the fall of mighty men and the subversion of the Jewish polity are represented:

'Howl, O fir-tree, because the cedar is fallen,
Because the goodly oaks are destroyed.
Howl, O ye oaks of Bashan,
Because the fenced wood is killed.'

In Am. 2:9, the Amorite is said to be 'strong as the oaks.'

The original Hebrew term for oak is derived, according to Celsius, from ad, robur, which is the Latin word for the oak, on account of its hardness and strength.

Oaks were the scene of idolatrous worship, and therefore are frequently mentioned as denoting such practices.

Jer. 2:31,

'I have not found it (the blood) in a digged hole,
But upon every oak.'

So Blayney renders it, in conformity to the Septuagint and the Syriac; and his note on the passage is—'In the law it is commanded, Le. 17:13, that the blood of animals killed in hunting should be covered with dust; in order, no doubt, to create a horror at the sight of blood. In allusion to this command, it is urged against Jerusalem, Ez. 24:7, that she had not only shed blood in the midst of her, but that "she had set it upon the top of a rock, and poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;" that is, she had seemed to glory in the crime, by doing it in the most open and audacious manner, so as to challenge God's vengeance. In like manner, it is said here, that God had not discovered the blood that was shed in holes under ground, but that it was sprinkled upon every oak, before which their inhuman sacrifices had been performed.'

The oak was not merely the scene of idolatrous worship, but sometimes the material of which the idol was made. Is. 44:14, 'He taketh the oak to make a god.' Horace has something similarly severe:

'Olim truces erant scilicet, lentile lignum,
Cum faber, incertis scannum foretne Priapum,
Maluit esse Deum.'

Sacred groves were a very ancient and favorite appendage of idolatry. They were furnished with the temple of the god to whom they were dedicated, with altars, images, and every thing necessary for performing the various rites of worship offered there; and were the scenes of many impure ceremonies, and of much abominable superstition. See Ez. 20:28, and Ho. 4:13, where idolatrous worship and its accompaniments,

'Under the oaks, and the poplar, and the ilex,' are severely reprehended.

OIL. The use of oil, in the anointing of a person, signifies the designation or inauguration of that person to some high office or dignity.

Ps. 45:7, 'God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.' See He. 1:9. It is applied to the Jewish kings. 1 S. 10:1, 'Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it on Saul's head, and kissed him.' 2 S. 1:21; see also 1 S. 16:1, 13. 1 K. 1:39, 2 K. 9:6.

It is applied to the Messiah, Is. 61:1; compared with Lu. 4:18, and Ac. 4:37, and 10:38. It is applied to Cyrus, Is. 45:1.

It is applied to Aaron the priest, Le. 8:12; and to the prophets, 1 K. 19:16.

The anointing, in 1 Jn. 2:27, is the spirit of illumination, furnishing with gifts and graces. This consecration with oil not only served as a form of adhesion to important functions, but was considered as adding a sacredness to the persons, and sometimes served as a guard against violence, in consequence of the respect attached to it. 'God forbid,' says David, 'that I should stretch forth my hand against Saul, since he is the anointed of Jehovah.' 1 S. 24:6.

Sometimes mere designation, without unction, is implied in it, as in the case of Cyrus, Is. 45:1, who was selected by God to restore Judah, and for the rebuilding of the temple of Jerusalem.

Sometimes it is used of the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as in Ps. 105:15, 'Touch not mine anointed ones,' for the word is in the plural number; not as literally anointed, but as specially favored of God, and set apart to be the heads or progenitors of a great nation.

It is more eminently used as applicable to the Mediator of the new covenant, by David, Ps. 2:2, who represents Him as King of Zion; by Isaiah, 61:1, as the proclaimer of great and good tidings; by Daniel, 9:25, as making expiation for the sins of the people.

And this was the substance of apostolic preaching; e. g. Ac. 17:18, 'This Jesus whom I preach to you is the Anointed One.' Ac. 18:5, 'Paul testified to the Jews, that Jesus was the Anointed One.' Ac. 18:28, 'showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Anointed One.'

The oil of gladness, Ps. 45:7, denotes the unction of the Holy Spirit, anciently typified by oil, by which unction Jesus was appointed to the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King.

In Zech. 4:14, Joshua the high-priest and Zerubbabel are styled sons of oil, as being anointed with the Holy Spirit, and made his instruments in reestablishing the church and state of the Jews. Compare verses 6 and 12.

Christians, as followers of the Messiah, and called by his name, may be considered as anointed ones, consecrated to his service. Would they were all such!

Oil is also the symbol of abundance, fertility, joy, &c. See Ps. 23:5, 92:11, 141:5. Song 1:3. Is. 61:3.

It is so considered, on account of its fragrance and salutary qualities. The latter are more particularly recognized in the New Testament, by the apostle James, 5:14, where he enjoins that the sick should be anointed with oil, in the name of the Lord, as an accomplishment of prayer, for their recovery. See also Mk. 6:13. This ceremony for it cannot be called an institution—was continued for some length of time in the primitive church; but it seems to have ceased when the miraculous gifts of healing were withdrawn. See the case of Proculus, mentioned by Tertullian in his address to Scapula, who is said to have cured the emperor Severus of a certain distemper by the use of oil; for which service that emperor was favorable afterwards to the Christians, and kept Proculus as long as he lived in his palace. Jerome and Chrysostom also mention cures of this kind; but how far they are to be esteemed miraculous must be left to every one's judgment.

OLIVE-TREE, on account of its verdure, soundness, and the usefulness of the oil it produces, is the symbol of prosperity, plenty, and enjoyment.

Thus the Psalmist, Ps. 138:3, describing the happiness of a man blessed of God, says, 'Thy children shall be like the olive-branches round about thy table.'

It is also the symbol of peace and abated anger. Thus Noah's dove, Ge. 8:11, had, on her return to the ark, an olive-leaf in her mouth.

In enumerating the sources of aliment and wealth, the prophet Habakkuk, 3:17, includes this among them, 'though the labor of the olive should fail.'

David compares himself to a green olive-tree in the house of God, Ps. 52:8. Hosea uses similar language respecting Israel, 14:6, 'His beauty shall be as the olive-tree'—a simile employed also by Paul, in advertising to their state before their rejection, where he speaks 'of the root and fatness of the olive-tree.' Ro. 11:17, 24.

In Zech. 4:3, 11, 14, the two olive-trees on either side of the lamp-scones, pouring oil into the lamps, are there explained to be the two anointed ones; Zerubbabel as captain of the people, and Joshua as high-priest. And this signified that these two maintained the nation of the captive Jews, both as to their ecclesiastical and civil state; as the olive-trees which afford oil maintain the light in the lamps, the symbols of government.

Reference seems to be made to this in Re. 11:4, where the two witnesses are described as the 'two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the God of the earth;' i. e. the faithful in every age, who refuse to comply with the general corruption, shall be constantly supported by divine aid, as if a lamp were kept always burning, by a continual supply of oil from a living olive-tree, constantly feeding it with the aliment of its flame, that it may never go out in darkness.

The olive became the emblem of peace to various and distant nations. See Virg. Æn. 7, l. 154; 8, 116; 11, 101. Livy, l. 20, c. 16; and 14, c. 25; and Statius, Theb. b. 12.

OLX. The ox appears as one of the cherubim exomphalos in Ezekiel's vision, 1:10; and the same seems to have been copied in a perverted way in the idolatrous images of the heathen, e. g.

Moloch had the head of a calf or steer. Apis or Serapis was represented in the form of a bull.

Mnevis, who was kept at Memphis, was figured in the same form.

Baal, or the sun, was worshipped under the form of an animal of the ox or beeve kind. We read of the heifer Baal in Tobit 1:5.

The Gauls worshipped a brazen bull.

Juggernaut's temple in the East Indies has, in the middle of it, an ox cut in one entire stone larger than the life.

In Ac. 14:13, we find the priest of Jupiter bringing oxen for sacrifice.

In 1 Co. 9:9, the question, 'Doth God take care for oxen?' leads the mind to the consideration of that higher sense the apostle has in view, namely, the maintenance of the Christian ministry; and is a proof, amongst others, that many injunctions under the law were emblematical of gospel institutions.

The ox has always been the symbol of agriculture, as Suidas terms it, who relates that the Egyptian Apis was a certain wealthy person, who, during a famine at Alexandria, relieved the people; at whose death they erected a temple to his memory, in which an ox was nourished, as the hieroglyphic of husbandry. And Abarbanel says, 'Therefore Jeroboam chose the appearance of an ox from the chariot of the cherubim, because it is the sign of abundance of corn and blessing of the autumn.' And so it is represented in Greek coins, an ox with an ear of corn, or a plough, to denote the fertility of the country. And the daughter of Zion is compared by Micah, 4:12, 13, to this animal, in a beautiful allegory.

See under CALF.

P.

PALM. Branches of palm-trees are the symbol of joy after a victory, attended with antecedent sufferings.

By the Mosaic law, Le. 23:40, they were used as a token of joy at the feast of tabernacles.

And they were used on any solemn occasion of joy, as after a victory or deliverance. 1 Mac. 13:51. Jn. 12:13.

With Philo, the palm is the symbol of victory. Alleg. b. 2, p. 50. And Plutarch, Sympos. b. 8, c. 4, gives the same signification, assigning the reason of it, from the natural property of the palm-tree to rise up against pressure. Hence palmæ for victory, of which numerous examples might be given from Horace, Cicero, Plautus, Ovid, Terence, and others.

And hence the logos of a triumphing emperor was called palmata, as having branches of palms painted thereon. Martial, b. 7, Ep. 1. Servius ad Aen. b. 2.

Ps. 92:12, 'The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.' Cardan observes, that the palm-tree continues long in its youthful state; so that he who plants one will scarcely live to see the fruit of it.

Re. 7:9, 'Palms in their hands.'

'Quid per palmam nisi premia victorie designatur,' &c.; i. e. what is meant by palms here, but the rewards of victory? For these are wont to be given only to conquerors. Hence also it is written of those, who in the contest of martyrdom have overcome the ancient enemy, and now rejoice as victors in their native region, that they have palms in their hands. Gregor. Magn. in Ezek. b. 2, p. 17.

It is easy to see what the multitude had in view when they carried palm-branches before the Savior. Jn. 12:13. Their actions and words corresponded—'Hosanna, (i. e. save us), blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.'

The ancients always speak of it as a stately and noble tree. It was esteemed an emblem of honor, and made use of as a reward of victory. 'Plurimum palmarum homines' was a proverbial expression among the Romans for a soldier of merit. Pliny speaks of the various species of palms, and of the great esteem in which they were held by the Babylonians. He says, that the noblest of them were styled the royal palms, and supposes that they were so called from their being set apart for the king's use. But they were very early an emblem of royalty, and it is a circumstance included in their original name, phoenix. We find from Apuleius, that Mercury, the Hermes of Egypt, was represented with a palm-branch hierarchy, seems plain from several places in the New Testament; a. g. Ro. 8:33. Ep. 1:21. 3:10. Col. 1:16. 2:10. Ju. verse 6. That there are such among the apostate angels, appears from Ep. 6:12. Col. 2:15.

The names Michael and Gabriel do not occur in any books of the Old Testament that were written before the captivity and it is suggested by some that they were borrowed from the Chaldeans, with whom and the Persians, the doctrine of the general administration and superintendence of angels over empires and provinces was commonly received.

We know, and can know, no more of the offices of these celestial agents, than what is revealed to us; and therefore it is in vain to indulge conjecture. In general, as Wintle well observes, we may conclude, that they will be favorable or unfavorable to any nation or people, according to their deserts; and that all things, and all powers, will work together for good to those that fear and love God.

PROPHECY consists, not only in predicting future events by divine inspiration, but also in a public study and zeal for God's laws; the office of the ancient prophets being not only to reveal future events, (which power was rather given them to establish their commission,) but also to preach and maintain the law of God, already established, when the Israelites forsook it, and to be zealous for it even unto death; to the end that their zeal and constancy might be a witness and testimony against their persecutors, of the truth of God's law.

The primitive notion also of a prophet, is to be a spokesman, or interpreter, or declarer of the mind of God to man, as appears by comparing Ex. 7:1, with Ex. 4:16. See also Virgil's Æneid, b. 10, v. 175.

So that a prophet is to bear witness or testimony to the truth against errors and corruptions. And hence to prophecy and to witness are used as near akin in several places of Scripture.

Thus, when our Savior was going to prophecy that one of his disciples should betray him, the word used is ὑπαγορεύω, He testified, instead of He prophesied. Jn. 13:21.

So, in Jn. 1:7, 'to witness concerning the light,' signifies to preach the gospel,—to be the great prophet and forerunner of the Messiah. So, in Ac. 1:8, and 22:15, the apostles and Paul are said to be witnesses, because they were preachers or prophets; and, in Ac. 20:23, the Holy Spirit is said to witness, ὑπαγορεύει. See likewise 1 Pe. 1:11.

And thus our Savior 'came into the world to bear witness to the truth'; i. e. to declare the will of God to men, as that great Prophet, De. 18:15,19, whom whosoever would not hear, should be cut off from his people.

Pr. 30:1, and 31:1, the prophesy which his mother taught him; rather the charge or lesson which king Lemuel's mother taught him. מִשְׁפָּט, mecha, is frequently used by the prophets to signify what they were charged with, and thence called a burden.

Re. 11:6, 'These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophesy,' &c.

An allusion to what Elijah and Moses did; meaning, that the witnesses should have similar power given them to smite the earth with plagues; at least, what they denounce against the enemies of truth, God will accomplish. The witnesses here are not single persons, but a perpetual collective body of men, or a succession of witnesses against the errors and false worship introduced into the church.

R.

RAIN is the symbol of divine benignity, vouchsafed as the reward of human obedience. Thus:

Ho. 10:12,

'Bow to yourself in righteousness,
Reap in the fruit of loving-kindness,
Break up to yourselves the fallow, ground of knowledge,
That ye may sow Jehovah,
Till He come and reign righteousness upon you.'

Ho. 6:3,

'The ingathering is prepared as the mowing,
And He shall come (i. e. as the rain,
As the latter rain which watereth the earth);'

i. e. He shall come as our deliverer, as surely as the morning comes after the night, or the latter rain comes in its season.

Rain is used as the symbol of discourse and instruction.

De. 32:2,

'My doctrine shall drop as the rain.'

Jh. 20:22,23,

'After my words they spoke not again,
And my speech dropped upon them;
And they waited for me as for the rain,
And they opened their mouth wide as for the latter rain.'

See also Is. 55:10-13, where the same is beautifully expressed, and the effects described under highly poetical images. The wilderness turned into a paradise, Lebanon into Carmel, the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, so that (as the Chaldee gives the moral sense of the emblem) 'instead of the wicked shall arise the just, and instead of sinners, such as fear to sin.'

The divine influences are compared to rain in Is. 44:3,4—

'For I will pour out waters on the thirsty,
And flowing streams on the dry ground;
I will pour out my Spirit upon thy seed,
And my blessing on thine offspring;
And they shall spring up as grass among the willows,
As the willows beside the aqueducts.'

Zch. 10:1, and 14:17, are in like manner understood by Vitringa to mean 'spiritual' rain. And he remarks on the latter place, 'If the Egyptians do not come up to the feast of tabernacles, there shall be no rain upon them;' these words appear a paradox, since there is no rain in Egypt at any time, as is well known; though modern travellers do testify that rain occasionally falls. But the sense of the place is, there shall be nothing analogous to rain, i. e. no overflowing of the Nile, to produce the usual fecundity. But the difficulty might be obviated, by supposing that the prophet meant that no rains would fall in Æthiopia, so as to produce the inundation of the Nile in Egypt.

Grainger says, in Lower Egypt it rains much and often; in Middle, seldom; in Upper, not at all.

Am. 7:6, to drop the word, is to prophesy,—the metaphor being taken from the symbol of rain or dew. See Ex. 20:46, and 21:2; also Mt. 24:11.

In 2 Pe. 2:17, false teachers are called 'wells without water.'

In Ps. 72:6, the blessings of Christ's coming are described as rain. And Homer, Il. ψ. v. 567, compares the exultation of joy in a man's mind to the morning dew reviving the corn.

Agreeably to this, the oneirocritics explain the symbol of rain or dew, of all manner of good things. They say, a fine, gentle, sunshiny rain is the symbol of a general good; according to which, the Psalmist says, 'Thou, O God, sentest a gracious rain upon thine inheritance, to refresh it when it was weary.' Ps. 68:9. Hence, among the Egyptians, the prophet carried in his hand, as a symbol of his office, in solemn processions, a pitcher, as being the disposer of learning, which is as water, rain, or dew to the soul.

A tempestuous shower may be the symbol of war. Thus Pindar compares war to a shower, Isthm. Od. 6. And Hannibal compares Fabius Maximus, hovering on the hills to avoid a battle, and afterwards coming down to snatch the victory out of his hands, to a cloud on the top of a hill, breaking out afterwards into a shower, with storms and flashes. Plutarch on Fabius.

RAINBOW. The rainbow was instituted by God Himself, as the symbol or sign of his covenant with mankind after the flood, where, in He had destroyed the whole human race, except one family.

By the rainbow, as a symbol or token of the covenant, He promised not to destroy the earth any more by the waters of the flood, and that upon the sight of it, He would be mindful of his promise. Ge. 9:13-17.

So that, whilst this world lasts, it will be a token of God's reconciliation with mankind; and consequently that He will not bring them wholly under his anger to destroy them.

So that, in general, it is a symbol of God's willingness to receive men into favor again.

The common bow is a symbol of war and victory. But the rainbow has two notable properties, which make it fit to be a symbol of peace. For,

1st. Its rundle, or part which should look towards the object aimed at, is always turned from the earth, thereby showing, that it aims not at men, as we know that the pointing of the sword downwards, is a token of submission or surrender.

2d. It has no string, which shows that the master will not shoot; so that a bow unpecked, or without a string, is a proper symbol of peace and friendship.

Hence the rainbow, however it appears, is, according to Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 38, always accounted good to them that are in great poverty, or other ill circumstances.

And all this is suitable to the natural properties of the rainbow, for it never appears but when there is a gentle rain with the sun shining, which kind of rain is never known to do any harm, but much good. See Danbuz, from whom these particulars are borrowed.

When the Jews beheld the rainbow, they bless God, who remembers his covenant, and is faithful to his promises. And the tradition of this its designation to proclaim comfort to mankind, was strong among the heathen; for,

according to the mythology of the Greeks, the rainbow was the daughter of Wonder, 'a sign to mortal men,' as Homer calls it, Il. 11, i. 27, 28—

'Reflected various light, and arching bow'd,
Like colored rainbows o'er a shaggy cloud,
Jove's wondrous bow, of three celestial dyes,
Placed as a sign to man amid the skies.'

Iris, or the rainbow, in Hebrew Krakot, was regarded as a goddess, and upon its appearance, was viewed as the messenger of the celestial deities; and that not only by the Greeks and Romans, but also by the inhabitants of Peru in South America, when the Spaniards came thither. The Abbe Lambert, tells us, 'The Peruvians paid great honors to the rainbow, as well for the beauty of its colors, as because they proceeded from the sun, and it was for this reason the incas, or sovereigns of Peru, took it for their device.'

Plutarch says, 'The Greeks made Iris the daughter of Thaumias, or Wonder, because men admired or wondered at her.' So Coma, the Academician in Cicero de Nat. Deor. l. 3. 20, quoted by Parkhurst, says, 'For this reason the rainbow is said to be sprung from Thaumias, because it has an admirable form.'

According to Homer, Il. 17, v. 547, the purple rainbow is spread out from heaven to mortal eye by Jove—

'As when high Jove, denouncing future war,
O'er the dark clouds extends his purple bow,
(In sign of tempest to the troubled air,
Or from the rage of man, destructive war),
The drooping cattle dandle the upland air,
And from his batt'ned field the laborer flies.'

An apocryphal writer has thus beautifully described it, Ecclesi. 6:12—

'Lo! upon the rainbow, and grass Him who made it:
Very beautiful it is in the brightness thereof;
It compasseth the heaven about with a glorious circle,
And the hands of the Most High have headed it.'

There is a reference to the rainbow, though not named, in Is. 54:9,10.

Ex. 1:28, 'As the appearance of the bow which is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about.'

Re. 4:3, 'There was a rainbow round about the throne, in appearance like an emerald.'

Re. 10:1, 'And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head.'

These three passages correspond with, and reflect upon, each other. The rainbow, as all of them is the designed token of God's covenant and mercy, and of his faithful remembrance of his promise.

RAM. In the symbolical language any horned beast may signify a king or monarch, because of the horns which denote power.

So a ram is the symbol of a plain monarch or prince; but other horned beasts are to be explained with some adjuncts; as a goat signifies, according to the interpreters, a foolhardy, fighting prince. And so Darius is represented in Daniel's vision, as a ram; whilst Alexander, the most furious and rash of all warriors, is figured by a goat.

So wild beasts, Onias, with horns, signify tyrants. In several parts of Scripture the word רָמ, which signifies a ram, is taken for a prince, as in the Song of Moses, in Ex. 15:3, the rams, or mighty men of Moab, in, in the Septuagint, the princes of the Moabites. And this is plainly from the metaphor; for the prince is the ram of the flock or people. See Ps. 80:1, 78:7,72.

RAZOR. Is. 7:20, 'Jehovah shall shave by the hired razor.'

To shave with the hired razor the head, the feet, and the beard, is an expression highly parabolical, to denote the utter devastation of the country from one end to the other, and the plundering of the people from the highest to the lowest, by the Assyrians, whom God employed as his instrument to punish the Jews. See Lowth's note on the place, and Ex. 5:1.

See under HAIR.

REED. The emblem of fragility and insecure support.

Egypt is compared to the staff of a broken reed, Is. 36:6.

Ezekiel has the same image, 20:7—

'All the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am Jehovah, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.'

When they took hold of thee with their hand,
Thou wast cruel, and didst say, Ah! their shoulder;
When they leaned on thee, thou wast broken,
And didst strain all their loins.'

It also denotes inconsistency and fickleness, as being easily moved by the air, Mat. 11:7.

Afflicted and contrite persons are compared to a bruised reed, Is. 42:3. Such persons the Savior would rather heal than discourage.

The reed was in ancient times used as a pen. 3 Jn. 13. It was used by fishermen as a rod; it was also employed as an instrument to measure with. It was about ten feet long, strong, and light. In Re. 11:1,2, there is men-ion made of such, and the representation seems to be taken from Ezekiel's vision, ch. 3, in which he beheld a person with a measuring rod, taking the dimensions of the buildings of a temple, showing the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of a new temple, to encourage the Jews to faithfulness in their allegiance, with the hopes of seeing the temple and true worship of God restored again.

There are two things, says Daubuz, mentioned in holy writ, whereby men may measure—a line and a reed.

'The line, ḥab, habal, implies constantly a division and giving of possession into new hands; because it is the instrument by which the lands of conquered nations are divided,' as in 2 S. 8: 1. 2 S. 28. Am. 7:17. Is. 34:11-17.

In 2 S. 8:2, it is said 'he measured them by reed.' i. e. he divided the country of the loabites into several parts, that he might the better know what towns it was most proper to demolish, and to extirpate the inhabitants of them. He used two lines—a line to put to death, and the fulness of a line to keep alive. 'The fulness of a line seems to denote a very large tract of country. See Chandler's Life of David, quoted by Parkhurst under ḥab.

The line implies also the division of a land into new lots, supposing a late conquest, and a being divided to be inherited by new masters. Na. 3:10.

But the reed, as it is also used about lands, is chiefly employed about buildings. In ch. 2:1-3, a line is used to measure the whole city. In Ezekiel, the reed is employed to measure the temple.

Profane authors have similar expressions, which show that a measuring reed or line is to take possession of the things measured. And hence from ḥab, a cane or reed, comes ḥab, hab, to acquire or possess.

This use of a line, as Paul explains the Law, or rule, upon which Paul argues, 2 Co. 10:13-16, the said rule signifying those churches to which he had the sole right by first occupation. 'But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you,' verse 6; and not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to our hand. See the whole passage.

A golden reed for measuring denotes that what is measured by it shall be glorious and eternal.

REND. To rend the garments was, in Eastern countries and among ancient nations, a symbolical action, expressive of sorrow, fear, or contrition.

Many instances may be seen in the sacred writings, viz. Jud. 11:35. Est. 4:1. Ge. 44:13. Mat. 26:65. Ezr. 9:5. Jb. 1:20. Jer. 36:24. 2 Ch. 35:27.

See also Virgil, Æn. 12.

'It cecidit veste Latinus,
Conjugis ætioris fatis, urbique ruinæ.'

Thus Seneca in his Octavia, v. 328,

'Scindit vestes Augusta suas, Laceratque comas.'

Jo. 2:13, 'Rend your hearts, and not your garments,' in allusion to this custom. But the phrase here is a Hebraism, meaning, rend your hearts rather than your garments; or, rend your hearts, and not your garments only. For the prophet does not forbid the external appearances of mourning; but he cautions them against a merely hypocritical show of sorrow, and exhorts them to cherish that broken and contrite spirit, which is acceptable in the sight of God. So, in De. 10:16, 'Circumcise the foreskin of your heart.' And Ho. 6:16, 'I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; i. e. I love the exercise of mercy rather than sacrifice, as the very best words plainly show, and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.' A somewhat similar form of expression we have in Ec. 6:17, 'God be thanked that ye were the servants of sin,' &c.; i. e. God be praised, that though ye once were the servants of sin, ye now ye have obeyed, &c.

Rending the garments was sometimes excessive of different passions. Thus in Dion Cassius, the consul Paulus rends his garment through indignation. Cæsar does the same when about to appease the multitude. Numbers also, in heathen history, upon the loss of their friends, Augustus rends his garment at the proposal of the dictatorship; and he is said to have done the same on hearing of the defeat of Varus.

REST, like sleep, is sometimes used as the symbol of death. Thus:

Re. 14:13,

'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord,
That they may rest from their labors.'

Ps. 57:2,

'He shall go to peace, he shall rest in his bed,
Even the perfect man, he that walketh in the straight paths.'

Jb. 3:13,

'For now should I have lain still and been quiet;
I should have slept; then had I been at rest,
With kings and counsellors of the earth;' &c.

Da. 12:13,

'But go thy way till the end be;
For thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.'

Compare Jb. 11:18. 1 S. 28:15. Re. 6:9. Ac. 2:26, &c.

This phrase is common on Jewish monuments for the dead: 'May his rest be in the garden of Eden, with the other just men of the world'—'May his soul rest in peace till the Comforter come. And one epitaph is to this effect: 'This stone which I have placed is a monument for the remains of Rabbi Eliakim, who was buried on the day before the feast of the passover, in the 95th year of his ministry. May his rest be in the garden of Eden with other just men. Amen, amen, amen. Selah.' Herodian has an expression of similar import, lib. 1, cap. 4, § 8. 'When he had survived one single day and night, he went to rest,' διεκοιμήσατο. See Virgil, Æn. 10, v. 745,

'Olli dæd, quies oculos, et ferreus urget Sonnus.'

And Æn. 6, v. 372,

'Sedibus ut saltem placida in morte quiescam.'

And so some of Gruter's inscriptions: 'Ex quieti æternæ, M. Autini Antoni,' Vet. Leg. 35, &c. And, 'Quorum corpora virginea hec condita sunt ad bene quiescendum.'

RESURRECTION, when used symbolically, signifies, according to the Oriental interpreters, a recovery of such rights and liberties as have been taken away, and a deliverance from war, persecution, affliction, and bondage.

What is said in Ez. 37:11-14, is conformable to these notions, the resurrection there spoken of being to be understood as there explained, of a deliverance of the Jews from thralldom and captivity, and a restoration of them to their own lands. For when resurrection is spoken of a political body, it is to be understood proportionably of a political resurrection of that body in the like power.

Paul uses the same phrase in the same meaning, Ro. 11:15, 'What shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead.'

And Isaiah, ch. 26:19, says,

'My dead shall live; my deceased shall rise,' &c.;

under this image predicting the deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression.

It appears from hence, as Lowth observes, contrary to the notion of Warburton in his Divine Legation, that the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine; for an image which is assumed in order to express any thing in the way of allegory, whether poetical or prophetic, must be an image commonly known and understood, otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed.

And so the Latin authors have used the word resurgere, as appears from Ovid, Fasti, b. 1, v. 523; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 15, c. 32; and Terence, Hecyr. act 5, scene 4, v. 13.

RIGHT HAND. Lifting it up denotes swearing. See Ge. 14:22. Ex. 6:8. Da. 12:7. Re. 10:5,6, and other places.

Among the Jews, the juror held up his right hand towards heaven, which explains a passage in Ps. 144:8,

'Whose mouth speaketh vanity,

And their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.'

The same form is retained in Scotland still, and is allowed by law to the Seceders in Ireland.

RIVER may be considered in several views:

1. In respect of its original and return thither. Ec. 1:7, 'All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full: to the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again.'

According to this consideration, the sea being a symbol of the extent of the jurisdiction or empire of any potentate, rivers will signify any emissary powers from thence, whether armies or provincial magistrates, or what agents abroad soever, that are under this chief power, and so act in reference to it. These may, according to exact analogy, be called rivers, because both themselves and their affairs have recourse to the main sea, the amplitude of that jurisdiction to which they belong.

The Oneirocritics say, in ch. 278, 'The sea is the symbol of a great king. And as all rivers run into the sea, so the wealth of the world flows to him.' And again—'New rivers running into the sea signify new revenues according to the king or kingdom from distant nations.'

2. A river may be considered in respect of its rising, overflowing, and drowning the adjacent parts; and in this view it is the symbol of the invasion of an army. Thus, in Is. 8:7,

God's bringing upon the Jews the waters of the rivers, signifies the warlike expedition of the Assyrians against the Jews. The symbol is used in several other places, as in Is. 28:2. 59:19. Jer. 46:7,8. 47:2. Am. 9:5. Na. 1:8. And in Da. 9:26, flood is immediately explained by war. So Plutarch compares Hannibal's expedition into Italy to a torrent. Horace, b. 4, Od. 14, compares Tiberius driving the enemies to an overflowing river. And Virgil, Æn. 7, v. 228, speaks of the fall of Troy under the similitude of a deluge.

And in Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 37, where the symbol is adapted to private life, 'a troubled and violent river running into a house, and carrying off or removing the movables therein, denotes an enraged enemy.'

On Is. 8:7, above referred to, the note of Bishop Lowth is very pertinent. 'The gentle waters of Siloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous, the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down, like a mighty flood, upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as a punishment for their manifold iniquities, and their contemptuous disregard of his promises.' The brook and the river are put for the kingdoms to which they belong, and the different states of which respectively they most aptly represent. Juvenal, inveighing against the corruption of Rome by the importation of Asiatic manners, says, with great elegance, that the Orontes has been long discharging itself into the Tiber—

'Jampridem Syrus in Tiberim defloxit Orontes.'

And Virgil, to express the submission of some of the Eastern countries to the Roman arms, says, that the waters of Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently—

'Euphrates hinc jam mollior unda.'

Æn. 8, 728.

The prophet adds, 'Even to the neck shall he reach.' He compares Jerusalem to the head in the human body; as when the waters come up to a man's neck, he is very near drowning, for a little increase of them would go over his head; so the king of Assyria, coming up to Jerusalem, was like a flood reaching to the neck,—the whole country was overflowed, and the capital was in imminent danger. Accordingly the Chaldees renders 'reaching to the neck,' by 'reaching to Jerusalem.'

3. A river may be considered as the barrier of a nation or kingdom. And in this respect, if a river or sea be dried up, it is a symbol of ill to the land adjoining. It signifies that its enemies will easily make a conquest thereof, when they find no water to stop their passage.

So Jordan was dried up to give the Israelites passage and possession of the Holy Land. So Isaiah, 44:27, speaking of the conquest of Cyrus, and the destruction of the Babylonian monarchy, has these words—'that saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers.'

The prophet Zechariah, 10:11, explains the symbol:

'And He shall pass through the sea with distress (unto) K,

And shall smite the waves in the sea,

And all the depths of the river (Nile) shall be dried up,

And the pride of Assyria shall be brought down,

And the sceptre of Egypt shall depart.'

See, to the same purpose, Is. 11:15,16, and 19:5,6.

4. A river may be considered in respect of the clearness, coolness, and excellent taste of its water, and of its usefulness in watering the grounds, and making them verdant and fertile. And in this view a river may become the symbol of the greatest good. Hence, in the oneirocritics, 'to dream of drinking of the pure, clear water of a river, denotes an attainment of joy and happiness by means of a great man.'

The heathen, in order to represent the universal power and beneficence of Jupiter, used the symbol of a river flowing from his throne; and to this the Sycophant in Plautus alludes (Trinum, act 4, sc. 2, v. 98) in his saying that he had been at the head of that river:

'Ad caput amnis, quod de calo exoritur, sub solo Jovis.'

But with God only is the fountain of life, Ps. 36:8,9, from whom proceeds a river of pleasures, representing the comforts and gifts of the Holy Spirit.

And therefore, in relation to private persons receiving the Holy Spirit, to their own joy, and to the advantage of others, our Savior says, Jn. 7:38, 'He who believeth on Me, as Scripture saith, shall prove a cistern, whence rivers of living water shall flow.'

And in relation to all the inhabitants of the New Jerusalem, the abundance and inexhaustible fund of their happiness is described in Re. 22:1, by their having 'a river of life clear as crystal, proceeding from the throne of God and of the Lamb.' As the first paradise is represented as watered by a river, that went out of Eden, to water the country,—and as Ezekiel, in his prophetic vision of a new city and temple, represents water in great plenty, flowing from the house or temple,—so it is here. Water being necessary to the support of life, contributing to refreshment, ornament, and delight, is elegantly made a figure to express the glorious and happy immortality of all true Christians in the heavenly state.

That rivers and streams are used as symbols of the Holy Spirit, may be proved by reference to Is. 35:6,7, compared with 32:15. Jo. 3:18. Is. 44:3. Ez. 47:1-7. Ps. 65:10,11. Ps. 68:10. Zch. 13:1. Ps. 72:6.

A Jewish writer says, 'As our first redeemer (Moses) produced a well, (Nu. 20:17), so our last Redeemer shall produce waters; as it is said, (Jo. 2:10), 'And a fountain shall go forth from the house of Jehovah, and shall water the valley of Shittim.'

That rivers were held in veneration by the heathen is well known; witness the Nile by the Egyptians, of which coins remain to this day, with the inscription, 'Deo Sacra Nile.' And Seneca, in his Epist. 4, says, 'Magnorum fluminum capita veneramus, subita et ex abdito vasti annis eruptio aras habet.'

ROBE. The robe and baldrick, or girdle, were the ensigns of power and authority, worn by kings, princes, and men in high station.

The high-priest wore a peculiar one, mentioned in Ex. 28:31.

David was clothed with a robe. 1 Ch. 15:27. The king of Nineveh, in a time of public repentance, put away his robe from him. Jon. 3:6.

Jesus was invested with a scarlet robe by the insulting Jews, as a mock emblem of royal dignity. Mat. 27:28. Lu. 23:11.

Ezekiel says, concerning Tyre, 24:16,

'Shall not all the princes of the sea come down from their thrones,

And lay aside their robes, And put off their embroidered garments?'

as marks of humiliation and depression.

The redeemed are said to be clothed with white robes, Re. 6:11, as expressive of the favor and acceptance of God, and as marks of approbation, honor, and dignity; for such garments were usually sent by princes as presents and as tokens of royal favor, granted only on special occasions. See Lu. 15:22. See also 28. 13:18, where kings' daughters are said to be so apparelled.

See under GARMENT.

ROD. It signifies primarily a shoot or branch of a tree, whence it came to be used for a tribe issuing out from a patriarch, as a branch from its stock, and afterwards for any rod or staff, whether of punishment or authority; and hence it has an appropriate signification, according to the purpose to which it is applied. A particular staff or sceptre is that used by a sovereign magistrate in token of his supreme authority. Sometimes it means the rod or staff which the herdsman or shepherd carried in his hand, and kept his cattle in order with.

As a sceptre, it occurs in Pa. 45:7. Ps. 110:2. Is. 14:5. Ez. 19:11-14. Compare Ps. 29.

In the pastoral sense, it occurs Ps. 23:4. Ez. 37:23. Mi. 7:15. Le. 27:32.

As the symbol of correction, it is used in 28. 7:14. Jb. 9:34, and 21:9.

In Ge. 49:10, the sceptre seems to denote, not regal authority, but tribal jurisdiction, or that exercised by the head of a tribe. Hence used for the ruler himself, Ge. 49:16. Compare verse 26, and 28. 7:7, with 1 Ch. 17:6.

Besides all these, there is the measuring-rod, for marking out portions of land to be purchased or inherited. Thus Jer. 10:16, and 51:19, 'Israel is called the rod of God's inheritance.' Every nation had its supposed tutelary deity, who might with propriety be styled its portion, on account of the peculiar relation that subsisted between them. The 'portion of Jacob,' therefore, is the same as the God of Jacob, who had marked Israel out for his own possession, as with a measuring-rod, and to whom the name of Jehovah belonged.

Ex. 30:37, 'And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you under the chariotment of the covenant.'

i. e. the chastisement due to you for breaking my covenant. But there may be an allusion here to the custom of numbering flocks and herds, by striking them with a rod, and of thus severing some for preservation and some for slaughter.

Ex. 21:10, 'It contemneth the rod of my son,' &c. This obscure passage appears better rendered thus:

'Alas, the sceptre of my son is destroyed; It dasheth every tree;'

by my son, meaning the people of God, who are so called, Ex. 4:22. Ho. 11:1, and referring the event to Nebuchadnezzar, who took away the sceptre and overturned the kingdom.

In Is. 10:5, the Assyrian is called 'the rod of God's anger.' In Jer. 1:11, a rod of an almond-tree is explained by the Targum of a king hastening to destroy, because the shaked, almond-tree, is a hasty budder, having its name from shaked, to hasten, or to do evil, or to watch for that purpose, as in Is. 29:20.

Amongst the pagans, magicians and augurs in their divinations made use of a rod, sceptre, or staff, which they pretended was given them by some god for that purpose.

And thus, in opposition to the rods of the magicians, which they used in their enchantments, God commanded Moses to make use of his rod or walking-staff in the working of miracles in Egypt, and which is therefore called, in Ex. 17:9, the rod of God. See more in Dabuz on this subject, art. Rod.

The Egyptian hieroglyphic of a sceptre, with an eye on the top of it, denoted a wise king or government.

In Ez. 37:16, a rod, from its name, being the same with that of a tribe, is used symbolically to signify the tribe of Judah, with all its adherents; as another, with the name of Ephraim, to denote all the apostate Israelites.

ROOT is the producer and bearer of a tree, and so denotes the origin from whence a person has his rise or being.

Thus Christ, who, in respect of his human nature, is the offspring, the son and successor of David in the government of the Jews, is also, in respect of his divine nature, the Root of David, the Lord from whom David received his government. See Re. 5:5. 22:16. Is. 11:10. 53:2. Ro. 15:12.

It is also put for the origin or first principle of any disposition or passion. See 1 Ti. 6:10. De. 29:18. He. 12:15.

To take root, or to become rooted, denotes permanency and multiplication. Jb. 5:3. Ps. 80:10. Is. 37:6, &c.

The withering of the root, on the contrary, signifies destruction. Jb. 18:16. Is. 5:24. Ho. 9:16.

Jb. 19:28 is thus rendered by Durell, preferably to the common version:

'Surely, ye shall say, Why have ye persecuted him? Had any ground of charge been found in him?'

S.

SACRIFICE is put for slaughter in several passages; among others, in Ez. 39:17,

'Come to my sacrifice which I make for you.'

This bold imagery is founded on the custom of invitations to feast after sacrifices. See Ge. 31:54. 18. 16:3. Zph. 1:7. Compare Is. 34:6, which Ezekiel seems to have imitated, and Re. 19:17,18, where we find Ezekiel's animated address to the birds of prey, and even some of his expressions. The prophet has indulged the bent of his genius in a sublime amplification. By the rams, bulls, and he-goats, in verse 18, of Ezekiel, are naturally expressed kings, princes, and tyrants; and the table of God, in verse 20, is the field covered with dead bodies, the place of the slaughter of Magog.

In Ja. 5:5, 'Ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter,' properly, sacrifice; there is the same allusion to a feast after a sacrifice.

SALT. Salt hinders flesh from corruption, and makes it keep, and is therefore the symbol of incorruption, eternity, and perpetual duration.

Thus, in Nu. 18:19, 'All the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee, by a statute forever: It is a covenant of salt forever.' See Horne's Introd. vol. iii. p. 192.

So again, 2 Ch. 13:5, 'The Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom to David forever by a covenant of salt.'

And so Lot's wife, Ge. 19:26, 'became a pillar of salt'; i. e. she was overtaken by the miraculous sulphurous shower, and thereby fixed and incruited like a statue; and being thus changed, symbolically showed that she was a standing or perpetual monument of divine vengeance.

Agreeably to this is our Lord's discourse in Mk. 9:48,49, who says, that the torments of the wicked shall be like that of those who are gnawed by a perpetual worm, in reference to their conscience; and that they shall be tormented also by an unquenchable fire, in reference to their body. He then proceeds—'for every one shall be salted with fire'; i. e. every one shall be salted or preserved by that very fire which torments him.

Salt is the emblem of barrenness—'All places,' as Pliny observes, 'where salt is found, are barren, and produce nothing.' De. 29:23,

'The whole land thereof shall be brimstone, and burning salt; it is not sown, nor bears, nor any herb grows therein, like the overthrow of Sodom,' &c. The land surrounding the Dead Sea is strongly impregnated with acid salt, and produces no plants: the very air is loaded with it, and cannot suit vegetation; 'whence,' says Volney, 'that aspect of death which reigns around the lake.' See Jud. 9:45, and Zph. 2:9. Ez. 47:11. Jer. 17:6. The passage in Ezekiel seems to be applied allegorically, meaning, that some shall reject the gospel, and some receive it without obeying it. And so in Pa. 107:34, according to the original, 'a fruitful land into saltness.'

Salt is the symbol of hospitality; see Ex. 4:14, 'Now, forasmuch as we are maintained from the king's palace,' literally, 'we are salted with the salt of the palace.' Salt, being a wholesome and necessary ingredient in human diet, has always been, and still is, among the Eastern nations, the symbol of hospitality and friendship. See Middle's Works, p. 370; Herbelot, Harmer, Cudworth, &c., cited by Parkhurst, Heb. Lex. p. 380. Diogenes Laertius, in his Life of Pythagoras, tells us that, concerning salt, it was his maxim that it ought to have its place upon our tables as a memento of justice and integrity, it being preservative of whatever it lays hold upon, and made out of the purest materials, water and the sea.

See Le. 2:13, where God prescribes that salt shall always constitute a part of the offerings made to Him. Salt, on account of its use in preserving food, and rendering it palatable, was anciently made the emblem of wisdom and virtue. Is allusion to this, Paul ordered the Colossians, Col. 4:6, 'to season their speech with salt, that it might be preserved from the corruption, condemned in Ep. 4:29. Macknight thinks the apostle might possibly refer to those elegant turns in conversation which, from the Athenians, took the name of stich salt.

Salt is the emblem of peace; Mk. 9:50, where the copulative may be considered as expletive—'Have salt in yourselves, that ye have peace one with another.' Being used as incense, and in sacrifices, it became a sort of bond of union, and hence a symbol of peace. Isidore says, Atque Sarcocolla, &c. &c. I wonder very much how it happens, that robbers, who brandish their naked swords and aim themselves against those who have never injured them, after partaking of their salt, cease to be robbers.'

SAND, as being an aggregate body of countless particles, is naturally employed as the symbol of multitudes. Considered as the barrier of the sea merely. It is the symbol of hope and safety, such as the shipwrecked mariner experiences when he reaches the shore.

God graciously promised Abraham that his posterity should be without number, as the sand. Ge. 22:17. 32:12.

And the quantity of corn which Joseph collected in Egypt is compared to the sand of the sea. Ge. 41:49.

And Hosea, speaking of the restoration from captivity, 1:10, says,

'Yet shall the number of the sons of Israel be as the sand of the sea,

Which cannot be measured or numbered.'

Horace calls Archytas

'Marie et terre sans nombre carere artem Menemem.'

Jeremiah, 5:22, beautifully describes the power of God, as displayed in his making the sea a boundary to the ocean—

'Will ye not fear Me?' saith Jehovah;

'Will ye not tremble at my presence?'

Who have appointed the sand a bound to the sea,

A perpetual ordinance, which shall not go beyond it;

Though it rise itself aloft, yet shall it not prevail;

Though the waves thereof roar, yet shall they not go beyond it.'

Sand, as symbolizing a multitude, is used by Pindar and others. And in Euripides, αριθμῶτος, the numberless, are the common people who are of no account. And Homer employs the same, 11. 2, 307, and 11. 9, 365.

Sand is a well-known characteristic of extensive deserts. See Strabo, b. 16, p. 522; and Lucian, Opp. T. 2, p. 841.

SCORPION is explained by the onomatopoeia of a wicked enemy, or mischievous, contemptible person. 'For the scorpion is constantly shaking his tail to strike, and the torment caused by his sting is very grievous.'

Hence Ezekiel, 2:6, compares the wicked Israelites to scorpions. And the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, 26:7, compares a man that hath a shrew to his wife, to one that taketh hold of a scorpion.

Scorpions, as well as locusts, last only five months. Re. 9:10.

The scorpion, on some coins of Hadrian, is said to denote Africa, either in reference to that country as the birth-place of multitudes of these creatures, or to the wiles and subtleties of the Carthaginians, as being pernicious, and engaging in wars. It is understood by dielines to be an emblem of the evil spirit; as in Lu. 10:19, where serpents and scorpions, and all the power of the enemy, are mentioned in connection with Satan falling from heaven, and with the subjection of the spirits or demons to the apostles.

SEA, in the Hebrew language, is an collection of waters, as in Ge. 1:10, 'the collections of waters He called seas.' So likewise that St. Matthew calls Θαλάσσια, sea, 8:24, is y Luke, 8:23, called Αἰθρῶν, a lake.

The Colchi, also, as Bochart proves, called seas by the name of sea. And Αἰθρῶν, lake, a Hesiod, stands for the ocean. Theog. v. 365. A sea clear and serene, denotes an orderly collection of men in a quiet and peaceable state.

A sea troubled and tumultuous, denotes a collection of men in motion and war.

Either way—the waters signifying people, and the sea being a collection of waters—the sea becomes the symbol of people, gathered into one body politic, kingdom, or jurisdiction, united in one design.

And therefore, the onecritics say, in ch. 78, 'If any dream he is master of the sea, he will be entire successor in the whole kingdom.' And again—'If a king see the sea troubled by a wind from a known quarter, he will be vexed by some nation from that quarter. But if he see the sea calm, he will enjoy his kingdom in peace.'

And in the same chapter, the sea and deep are interpreted of a great king.

Agreeably to this, in Da. 7:2, the great sea agitated by the four winds, is a comprehension of several kings or kingdoms in a state of war; or kingdom fighting against another to enlarge their dominions.

See under FISHES.

In Ps. 65:7, these two are classed together, bowing the analogy—

'Who stilleth the noise of the seas,
The noise of their waves,
And the tumult of the people.'

In Jer. 51:42, 'The sea is come up over Babylon.'

Here the sea is put metaphorically for a numerous army, and the overspreading of waters, or the invasion and conquest of the country.

In Is. 60:5, 'The riches of the sea shall be poured in upon thee,' is explained by the next line.

'And the wealth of the nations shall come to thee;' meaning the inhabitants of the islands, and their devotedness to the gospel.

Re. 4:6, 'Before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal;' an allusion to that which was in the temple of old, 1 K. 7:23, and seems to denote the purity that is required in all who make a near approach to the presence of God.

Re. 8:9, 'The third part of the creatures which are in the seas, and had life, died.'

See Ex. 20:3, &c.

Re. 10:2, 'He set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth.'

As earth and sea make up this terrequeous globe, so the inhabitants of the earth and sea seem, in this prophecy, to mean the inhabitants of this world at large. See Re. 12:13, 13. But Sir Isaac Newton thinks the expression represents the angel standing with one foot on Asia, and the other on Europe, to signify that he prophesies he was about to reveal would elate to both the empires of the east and west.

Re. 13:1, 'I saw a beast rise up out of the sea;' i. e. a new dominion or government, which should owe its origin to the commotions of the people.

Re. 15:2, 'I saw a sea of glass, mingled with fire.' Of this it is difficult to give a satisfactory interpretation.

Re. 21:1, 'and there was no more sea;' i. e. here were no turbulent spirits to disturb the peace of that happy state—for the new heavens and new earth merely denote a new order of things, in which former sorrows and troubles shall no more be remembered.

Vitrinus says, 'The sea in general, in a mystical sense, is taken for the world as opposed to the church, or for that part of the earth where there is no worship of the true God; for as the globe is divided into two parts, earth and sea, so the world is divided into two parts, that within and that without the church, which last comes under the name of sea, as being in continual commotion, as incapable of cultivation, as the seat of storms and tempests, and dangerous to navigate. Hence the wicked are compared to it in Is. 57:20.'

The same author observes, on Re. 21:1,2, that there was no sea in the New Jerusalem. 'John saw there no pagans or idolaters,' because in that latter period the whole world will receive the true worship of God; therefore the sea, in the mystical sense, will be abolished, and the whole new world will be changed into earth, or land.

Ewaldus supposes that by the earth, or land, in Re. 10:2, is meant Judea, and by the sea, Gentilium; and that his posture, with one foot on each, denotes dominion, lordship, or conquest, since to place the foot on any one implies this. See Ps. 110:1. De. 11:24. Jos. 1:3. 1 Co. 15:57, &c.

Among the ancients, the sea was the symbol of various matters, 1. Of the world and its vanities, according to the Persian proverb, 'He who covets this world's goods, is like one who drinks sea-water; the more he drinks, the more he increases thirst, nor does he cease to drink until he dies.' 2. Of calamities and persecutions. Thus, Ps. 69:1,2,14,15. 124:4,5. 3. Of inconstancy.

SEALING. Sealing has several acceptations.

1. It denotes preservation and security. Thus, in Song 4:12, 'a fountain sealed,' is a fountain carefully preserved from the injuries of weather and beasts, that its water may be preserved good and clean.

In Jb. 14:17, 'Sins sealed up in a bag,' signify that no sin shall be forgot. And thus, for the greater security, the stone at the mouth of our Savior's sepulchre was sealed with a seal.

2. It denotes also propriety, from the custom of sealing goods and servants when they were bought, that it might be known to whom they belonged.

3. Sealing denotes secrecy and privacy; men sealing up those things which they intend to keep secret.

Thus, a book sealed, Re. 5:1, is a book whose contents are secret, and have for a very long time been so, and are not to be published till the seal be removed. Horace has used the like symbol, b. 1, Ep. 90, v. 3.

And in Is. 29:11, 'a vision like to a book sealed,' is a vision not understood.

4. Sealing sometimes signifies completion and perfection; because the putting of the seal to any instrument or writing completes the matter about which it is, and finishes the whole transaction.

Thus, concerning the king of Tyre, the prophet Ezekiel says, 28:12, 'Thou sealest up the sum (or measure) full of wisdom and glory;' that is, thou lookest upon thyself as having arrived at the highest pitch of wisdom and glory.

Thus the Arabians call the Koran 'the seal of God's promises,' as being, according to them, the completion or perfection of God's promises; and Mahomet, 'the seal of the prophets,' as being, according to them, the greatest of the prophets, after whom no more are to follow.

5. Sealing signifies assent, confirmation, and authority, from the use of a seal's being put to decrees, diplomas, covenants, and wills.

Thus, in Nu. 9:30, the princes, the priests, and Levites, to show their assent to it, sealed the covenant. And sealing has the same signification in Jn. 3:33.

In Est. 8:8, a writing sealed with the king's seal, denotes the will and pleasure of the king, and that it is unalterable, not to be reversed.

And hence a person sealed, signifies a person authorized and commissioned; as, in relation to our Savior, concerning his giving that meat which endureth to everlasting life, says John, 6:27, 'Him hath God the Father sealed.'

Hence the bearing of a ring or seal is the token of a high office. See Ge. 41:41.

And therefore, in Aristophanes, the giving of a ring to a person is making him chief magistrate or high steward; and the taking away of the ring is the discharging him of his office.

And to the same purpose speak the Persian and Indian Interpreters in ch. 260, concerning a ring or seal.

6. Sealing signifies hindrance and restraint, to put a cessation to, or stop the effect of any design. Thus, in Jb. 37:7, God is said to seal up the hand of every man; i. e. to hinder their work by storms and wet weather, or to restrain their power.

And so in Jb. 9:9, he is said to seal up the stars; i. e. to restrain their influences.

And thus in Eschylus, Eumen. v. 830, &c. thunder sealed up, is thunder restrained, not used, or laid aside.

In Ep. 1:13, 'Ye were sealed with the promised Holy Spirit,' there is thought to be an allusion to the magic rings and seals common amongst the Ephesian idolaters, used as amulets or charms, and for other similar purposes, as mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromata, lib. 1, and by Lucian, Phileps. t. 2; also by Aristophanes in Phit. The Εστέρα योगα, or Ephesian letters, were thought to have the same virtue. To such as these vain securities, the apostle opposes the sacred seal of the Holy Spirit, as an earnest of their heavenly inheritance.

SEE. To see is, in several places, a prophetic expression, showing the proper work of the prophets. For, in 1 S. 9:9, he that was in those days called a prophet, was beforetime called a seer, and, therefore, their inspiration, when it was given them by symbols, comes under the name of seeing, or vision, as in Nu. 24:4,16.

And this is the very style of the heathens, as appears from Euripides and Virgil. Helen, v. 755; En. b. 6, v. 86, 87.

Verbs that belong to the human senses are often put for one another in the best authors. Thus, to see a voice, is an expression used by the sacred writers, and by Eschylus. Ex. 20:18. Re. 1:12. Prometh. v. 21.

Aristophanes uses ἰσάομαι τὴν ὄψιν, taste the door, instead of feel the door. Rane.

And Petronius, a nice author as to matters of style, says, 'Necdum libaveram cellulas limen.' See also Lucretius, b. 1, v. 645.

The eyes often sympathize with the affections of the soul, and therefore, to see, in Scripture, frequently signifies to rejoice or to be grieved, according to the circumstances of the person affected.

Thus old Simeon, when he saw our Savior, said, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation;' i. e. I shall now die in peace and joy, because I have seen my Savior.

So, in Ps. 64:18, 'If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not bear me;' i. e. If I take delight in sin, God will not bless me.

In like manner, as to the affection of sorrow, 2 K. 7:2, 'Thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not eat thereof;' i. e. thou shalt have the sorrow now to enjoy the benefit of it.

See also 2 K. 22:20. Est. 8:6. Ps. 112:10. 1 S. 2:33. De. 28:34. So, in profane authors, in relation to joy, pascere oculos, to feed the eyes, signifies to take a delight in seeing; in oculis gestare, to carry a person in one's eyes, is to love him dearly, to desire to have him always present.

And in relation to sorrow, a thing done before the eyes heightens the grief, as in several places in Terence and Virgil.

So in Lu. 1:48, 'He hath regarded the low estate of his handmaid,' means, He has taken a delight in favoring her, so as to account her worthy of the greatest honor.

And on the other hand, our seeing God, denotes the large and clear knowledge we shall have of Him, the inconceivable pleasure of contemplating Him, the joy of loving and of being loved by Him; all which is fitly represented by seeing, sight being of all our senses the most noble and refined.

SEPULCHRE occurs several times in Scripture in a symbolical sense; as in Ps. 5:10, 'Their throat is an open sepulchre;' and so of the Chaldeans, in Jer. 5:16.

Their graves is an open sepulchre; All of them are mighty men.

And our Lord, in Mat. 23:27, compares the Pharisees to whitened sepulchres, as being hypocrites.

Sepulchres, as he observes, are full of dead men's bones, and all uncleanness; and though the Pharisees outwardly had a show of sanctity, their inward principles were evidently unsound and corrupt.

Those who touched the dead, were considered as polluted; and hence burying-grounds were generally without the city, in places remote from the usual commerce of men. So our Lord's character of the Pharisee shows that He considered them as dangerous guides in religion. And in Lu. 11:44, He calls them 'graves that appear not,' as those of the poor no doubt often were, being concealed with grass and weeds. See Nu. 19:16. Because the Pharisees concealed, under a cloak of sanctity, the real abominations of their hearts, and professed a strict regard to the letter of the law, while they were filled with malice, covetousness, and vain-glory.

In the same chapter, viz. Mat. 23:29, He says, 'Ye garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,' in allusion to a custom prevalent among the Greeks, as well as among the Jews, of repairing and adorning the monuments of those who had merited well of them, or who had suffered an undeserved death. Thus Homer, Il. 16,

'His friends and people, to his fathers' graves,
A marble tomb and pyramidal' raise,
And leading honors to his ashes give;
His name ('tis all the dead can have) shall live.'

And Rhabdellus produces a passage from Xenophon to this effect:—'If any one do not adorn (the very term used in the gospel) the sepulchres of his dead parents, the state will inquire into it in the investigation of the magistrates.' And Lucian has the following — 'Those who have valuable and lofty monuments on the earth, and columns, and images, and inscriptions, are not more honorable in the shades below than the plebeian dead.' All these things were done 'to be seen by men'; and our Lord traces them all to the principle of vain ostentation.

* Yet *as these bones from insult to protect,
Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked,
Implore the passing tribute of a sigh.*

The Jews were in the habit of visiting the sepulchres of the dead; and hence they thought, when Mary, the sister of Lazarus, went out, that she had gone to the grave to weep there. They even erected temples over the sepulchres, and performed religious worship therein. Mahomet is said to have execrated them on this account. The prophet, in his last disease, from which he never arose, said, 'May God curse the Jews, for they convert the sepulchres of their prophets into temples.'

As to whitened sepulchres, Dr. Shaw observes, that 'tombs among the Moors, with the very walls of their cupolas and enclosures, are constantly kept clean, white-washed, and beautified, and so far continue to illustrate the expressions of our Savior. It is in reference to this that Paul calls Ananias a whitened wall, Ac. 23:3, an expression which proved prophetic; for Ananias, after having contributed to the ruin of his country, by a powerful faction which he had raised, and which produced many calamities, was slain after the revolt of the Jews, A. D. 66, with his brother; and fell not by the arms of the Romans, but by another faction of the Jews, which was headed by his own son.' Tillamont, H. E. 1, p. 274.

SERPENT. The symbol of Satan, who is called the 'old serpent.' Re. 12:9.

This symbol occurs frequently in Scripture, viz.

1 Co. 12:3, 'I fear, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety.'

Lu. 10:19, 30, 'I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy,' &c. 'Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject to you, but, &c.'

Re. 12:12, 'The devil is come down to you, having great wrath.'

Re. 12:14, 'And the woman was nourished for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.'

Re. 20:2, 'And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, who is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years.'

Hence the phrases, 'offspring of vipers,' Mat. 3:7, and 'children of the devil,' Jn. 8:44, may be considered to be parallel.

The Jews acknowledge the serpent to be the symbol of Satan. In the cabalistic book, entitled Tikkun Sepher, quoted by Vitrings, Observ. Sacr. Tit. 1, p. 13, we read, 'He said to them, That serpent with which ye contend, that ye may escape from him, is the same who hath slain and devoured others, and not only the first man, but all generations.' And Malmonides, Mor. Nev. p. 2, c. 30, 'Sammal (i. e. the serpent seducing Eve) is no other than Satan himself, whatever secret that name may signify; he is also called Nachash, a serpent.' Those passages of the fathers, in which this symbol is adverted to, may be seen in Suicer's Thesaurus, article Ophis.

It is well known that the serpent was worshipped with divine honors among many ancient nations. See Herodotus, Aelian, and others. Suidas Apollinaris has this passage:

* Magnus Alexander nepos Augustus habebat Cucupri Serpente Deo.

See also the Octavius of Minucius Felix. We find many ancient coins with the figure of serpents; and somewhere an altar is exhibited, and a serpent, to whom Victory is sacrificing. See Spanheim de usu Numism.; and Osiel on the same subject, who has a plate representing a serpent with a green tree, as if the worship of the serpent had been derived from the seduction of Eve in the garden.

We learn from the New Testament, that Satan was considered by our Lord as the 'prince of this world,' Jn. 12:31; and by Paul, as the 'god of this world,' 2 Co. 4:4. In allusion to which, the apostle observes, Ep. 6:12, 'We wrestle not against flesh and blood (only), but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of this dark world, against wicked spirits in high places.' And hence Idolatry is termed in Ps. 106:37, a sacrificing their sons and daughters unto devils or demons. And the same is affirmed in De. 32:17, 1 Co. 10:20. Re. 20:2. In Ep. 2:2, Satan is called the 'prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience;' and in He. 2:14, he is said to 'have the power of death, by which men can only be delivered by a Redeemer.'

As the head of the serpent is the seat of life, hence the overthrow of Satan's power is called 'bruising or crushing the serpent's head.' Ge. 3:15. Ro. 16:20 has a plain reference to the same subject. And this overthrow is attributed to the Messiah. 1 Jn. 3:8.

Among the Hebrews, Nachash, or Nekash, was the name of the land-serpent, and of that tribe of animals in general; the river-serpent, crocodile, &c. they called tenin. Among the Latins, the water-snakes were called anguis; the land-snakes, serpentes; and when these animals were consecrated, and in temples, dracones, from which our term dragon. And so Virgil styles them, when they are said to be hid at the feet of Pallas, Æn. 2, v. 225:

* At gemini lapus delubra ad summa dracones
Mugiant, &c.

The Egyptians reputed the serpent to be an emblem of their god Cneph, by which word they meant the Demiurgus, or maker of all things. And the Phœnicians seem to have represented, in their mystic figures of the serpent, the power by which all things consist. See Buckford, vol. iv.

The skorap, mentioned by Moses, Nu. 21:6, are no where called dragons, but are a species of serpent, which probably had that name from the heat or burning pain occasioned by their bite, or from their vivid, fiery color; for skorap signifies to burn. See also De. 8:15. The Septuagint call it 'the biting serpent.' It is referred to in Is. 14:29 —

* For from the root of the serpent shall come forth a basilisk,
And his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.'

Is. 30:6,

* The burden of the beasts travelling southward,
Through a land of distress and difficulty,
Whence come forth the lioness and the fennel lion,
The viper and the fiery flying serpent;

describing the deserts through which the Israelites passed in their journeys, and which were designed to be a barrier between them and Egypt. It is remarkable, that the seraphim, or cherubic emblems, derive their name from the same root, meaning burning spirits.

The serpent or dragon is employed by the sacred writers as the symbol of solitude and desolation; for as venomous and loathsome creatures generally hide themselves in uninhabited places, amidst ruins, rocks, and rubbish, so, where there is any mention of the ruin of a city, or the desolation of a province, the place is said to be a dwelling for dragons. Thus, Is. 13:22,

* And wolves shall howl to one another in their palaces,
And dragons in their voluptuous pavilions;
similar to what Milton has said, Par. Lost, b. 11, l. 750,

Where luxury late reigned, sea-monsters whelped,
And stabled.'

Is. 34:13,

* And in her palaces shall spring up thorns,
The nettles and the bryony, in her fortresses;
And she shall become a habitation for dragons,
A court for the daughters of the ostrich.'

Jer. 9:11,

* And I will reduce Jerusalem into heaps, a den of dragons,
And the cities of Judah will I make a desolation without inhabitant.'

When the opposite picture is intended, that is, a recovery from desolation, then the following language is used: Is. 35:7,

* And the serpent, or goring sand, shall become a pool,
And the thistle shall bud as the hyacinth,
And in the havens of dragons shall spring forth
The grass, with the reed, and the bulrush.'

In Ps. 148:7, amongst other parts of creation invited to praise God, we find the following:

* Praise Jehovah, ye dragons, and all deeps!

meaning, ye great serpents, and all deep caverns, where they dwell.

The Hebrew words tenin and tenest seem sometimes to be applied to an animal of a different species, though our translators, without discrimination, have rendered them by dragons in the following passages: Jb. 30:29. Mi. 1:8. Ma. 1:3. From the noise, waiting, or whining, ascribed to it by Micah, it more probably means the jackal, or shakal, which, in the night, makes a lamentable, howling noise, as Pococke, Shaw, and Bochart remark.

In Jer. 51:34, Nebuchadnezzar is compared to a dragon —

* He hath swallowed me up like a dragon; he hath filled his maw;
From our Eden (or Paradise) he hath cast us out;

where there seems to be an allusion to the ejection of the first human pair from the garden of God's planting. According to the onirocritics, the dragon is the symbol of a king that is an enemy.

Jb. 26:13,

* By his spirit He hath garbled the heavens;
His hand hath formed the crooked serpent.'

The Septuagint read — 'hath killed the rebel dragon.'

It is difficult to say to what this applies. The rabbin apply it to the constellation called Dracon; Parkhurst, to some sea-monster. Schleiermacher explains it — 'Serpentine celeriter as faga proripitem.'

Re. 12:3, the dragon here seems intended to represent some fierce and powerful enemy of the Christian church; and, from the description given of its seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon its head, we are led to infer that the Roman power is here meant, since to no other does this description so well apply. This dragon is said to have fought (see verse 7) with Michael and his angels; and, in verse 9, he is said to be cast out or discomfited. The whole seems to intimate, that there should be a sharp contention between faithful Christians on the one hand, and the maintainers of error, idolatry, and wickedness, on the other, represented by these two symbolical classes; which contention should at last end in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion.

The language employed appears to allude to the fall of the rebel angels, at a period prior to the creation of the present world; but we are left so much in the dark on that subject, that the allusion is more matter of conjecture.

As to the beast, spoken of in Re. 13:11, 'who spake like a dragon,' it is extremely difficult to give any satisfactory interpretation of what is meant by it. The opinions of commentators differ so widely from each other, and appear so little in accordance with the prophetic description, that one is compelled to leave the matter undetermined. That which seems most plausible, is the explanation given by Bishop Newton, who considers the ten-horned beast to be the Roman state in general, and the two-horned beast to be the Roman church in particular. And his 'speaking like a dragon,' he explains to mean, 'his usurping divine titles and honors—his commanding idolatry, and his persecuting and slaying the true worshippers of God and faithful servants of Jesus Christ.'

We read in the 21st chapter of the first book of Macrobius, that 'two serpents were carved under the images of Esculapius and Beah, because they bring it to pass, that the human constitution is again renewed by their influence, as serpents are by throwing off their skins.'

Herodotus, likewise, in his 8th book, says, that 'the ancients worshipped the gods and geni of any place under the form of serpents.' Hence Pausanias's expression, Stat. 1, l. 112,

'Piage d'ous angues: Peier, met est loca.'

The serpent was adored in Egypt as the emblem of the divine nature, not only on account of its great vigor and spirit, but of its extended age and reverescence. In Cashmere, also, there were no less than 700 places where carved figures of snakes were worshipped. In Sallette and Elephanta, almost all the deities either grasp serpents in their hands, or are envisioned with them, which can only be intended as a mark of their divinity. In the hieroglyphic sculpture of Egypt, their wreathed bodies represented the oblique course of the stars, while the same bodies formed into a circle were an emblem of eternity; and the serpent was one of the most conspicuous of the forty-eight great constellations, into which the ancients divided the visible heavens. Maurice's Ind. Antiq. vol. II, p. 169.

SEVEN. Of all the sacred numbers, this is the most ancient and remarkable: the most ancient, as marking the septenary division of time from the creation of the world; and the most remarkable, as being used to set forth a great variety of events and mysterious circumstances.

It may be viewed in two lights, as the symbol of perfection, and as the symbol of rest. God consecrated the seventh day as a day of repose; and every seventh year was sabbatical, as being consecrated to the rest of the earth. The rest of the seventh day, or Sabbath, according to the apostle, He. 4:4, 9, intimates eternal rest.

Seven times seven, or the forty-ninth year, introduced the year of jubilee. Jacob's seven years' service to Laban; Pharaoh's seven oxen, and seven lean ones; the seven branches of the golden candlesticks; the seven trumpets, and seven priests who sounded them; the seven days' siege of Jericho; the seven churches, seven spirits, seven stars, seven seals, seven vials, and many others, sufficiently prove the importance of this sacred number.

But in several places, seven, like ten, is put indefinitely for many. Thus, Is. 4:1, 'seven women;' i. e. several or many women. Ps. 12:6, 'Silver purified seven times;' i. e. many times.

Ps. 79:12, 'Render to our neighbors seven-fold;' i. e. punish them severely.

Pr. 26:16, 'Seven men that can render a reason;' i. e. a many men.

The word seven (Heb. shabo), in its radical meaning, imports sufficiency, fulness, plenitude. And the seven prismatic colors, and the seven sounds of the octave, seem to give it a universality which no other number possesses. Cicero declares, that it contains the mystery of all things. Hippocrates affirms, that this number, by its occult virtue, tends to the evolution of all things; and he, like Shakespeare, divides the life of man into seven ages.

Even in the heathen world, we find traces of this favorite number—the seven wise men of Greece; the seven wonders of the world; the seven stars; the seven chiefs before Thebes; the seven bulls' hides in the shield of Ajax, and many more.

We have also the seven heavens of the rabbins, the seven sacraments of the church of Rome, the seven champions of Christendom, the common phrase of a man's seven senses, the seven years' apprenticeship, seven years' transportation, and the like.

In the divine economy, in respect of chastisements, it is very evident. Thus, in Jb. 5:12, the just is only smitten six times, but not seventh; 'He shall deliver thee in six troubles; yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee.'

Thus, also, in Ez. 9:2, six men are employed to destroy, but the seventh has the inkhorn, whereby they that were to be saved are marked.

Philo observes, that nature loves the number seven; which Censorinus confirms, by saying, that 'the said number was of great efficacy in every thing.'

Farther, the two numbers of four and seven are observed by Hippocrates to be critical in the growth and resolution of fevers. He says, 'Of seven days, the fourth is the index; of the next septenary, the beginning of it, viz. the eighth day; and the eleventh as being the fourth of the second septenary; and the seventeenth as being the fourth from the fourteenth,' &c.

Sabao, seven, is plainly derived from shebo, he was full. And so, shebo, to swear, is derived from the signification of fulness; an oath being an end of all strife for confirmation, He. 6:16, when things are unseen or future, to content for the present, to satisfy and fill the mind.

Zch. 4:10, 'These seven are the eyes of Jehovah, which run to and fro through the whole earth.'

Mede interprets this of the seven principal angels which minister before the throne of God, and are therefore called archangels. That the Jews had a notion or tradition of this kind, appears from the paraphrase on Ge. 1:17, where the words, 'Go to, let us go down, and confound their language,' are thus paraphrased—'The Lord spake to the seven angels which stand before Him, Go to now, let us go down,' &c.

These seven archangels seem to be considered as the privy council of God, to whom his secret purposes are made known before their accomplishment.

And here in Zechariah, the seven lamps are said to be, i. e. to denote the seven eyes of the Lord; that is, the seven watchers or prime ministers of his providence. This is confirmed by John, Re. 4:5, who says, he 'saw seven lamps before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God.' And again, Re. 5:6, 'I saw a lamb having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth,' nearly the words of Zechariah. Josephus, de Bello Judico, b. 6, c. 6, affirms that the seven lamps signify the seven planets, and that they stood slopewise, to express the obliquity of the zodiac. This is a notion of his own; but the Jewish astrologers considered the seven angels to be the prefects of the seven planets. In the salutation set down, Re. 1:4,5, the language is, 'Grace be unto you, and peace from Him who is, who was, and who is to come, and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne, and from Jesus Christ, the faithful witness.' Here the seven Spirits are set between the Deity and his Son. And in Re. 8:2, 'I saw,' says John, 'the seven angels who stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets.' These are the chief princes mentioned in Da. 10:13—'Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me.' And we find Paul adjuring Timothy thus: 'I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels,' meaning not the angels in general, but the seven archangels which stand before the throne of God.

And hence in Persia, whose monarchy was at one time regulated in part by Daniel as prime minister, there were seven chief princes, so that the Persian court, in that respect, resembled the hierarchy of heaven. They are twice mentioned in Scripture: Est. 1:14, the seven princes of Media and Persia, who saw the king's face, and sat first in the kingdom; and in Artaxerxes' commission to Ezra, 7:14, they are called the king's seven counsellors.

Perhaps, when the church of Jerusalem chose seven deacons to minister in the society, they had an eye the same way.

And we find the angel that appeared to Zacharias and Elisabeth saying, 'I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God.' Now, all the angels, in one sense, stand in the divine presence; but not in this peculiar sense, as his prime minister. And Michael is said, in Da. 12:1, to be the prince that stood up for Daniel's people. And in the church's combat with the dragon, Re. 12:7, Michael and his angels are said to be her champions, and to have cast the dragon down to the earth. And in Zch. 3:9, it is said, 'On one stone there are seven eyes;' that is, that these seven eyes or angels superintend the foundation which Zerubbabel laid for the temple. And so we may guess at the meaning of what Hanani the seer told king Asa, 2 Ch. 16:9—'The eyes of the Lord (i. e. these seven eyes) run to and fro through the whole earth, to show themselves strong in behalf of those whose hearts are perfect towards Him.' See Mede's Works, p. 43.

SHADOW. In determining the true signification of figures, it is necessary we should view the objects in the same light in which they appeared to the author who employed them. We must have an eye to the climate in which he lived, the prevailing customs and popular notions of the country, &c. In a cold country, a shade or shadow would scarcely be allowed to be a proper emblem of any thing that is desirable. But in Palestine and other hot countries, where the scorching heat was intolerable, nothing was more pleasant than a shade to protect from it. The first care of Jonah, when he waited in the plain near Nineveh, in order to be an eye-witness of the fate of that great city, was to prepare a booth, and sit under it in the shadow. The only comfort God sent him to allay his grief, was to make a gourd or shady plant to come up over Jonah, and that comfort was no sooner taken from him, than the sun beat upon his head that he fainted, and he wished in himself to die.

This image, which is taken from the life, may help us to account for the most vehement desires being compared to a laborer's longing for the shadow. Jb. 7:2.

Agreeably to the same notion, we find among the principal blessings promised in Christ's kingdom, Is. 4:6, a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat.

Thus the general construction to be put upon the word shade, or shadow, is that of protection against some great evils, or security arising from such protection.

See Jd. 9:15. Jb. 40:22. Ps. 17:8. 63:7. 91:1, and many others.

Sometimes the term shadow is used as the symbol of transitoriness. See 1 Ch. 29:15. Jb. 8:9. 14:2. Ps. 102:11. 144:4. Ec. 6:12.

'Shadow of death,' Jb. 3:5. 24:17, &c.; i. e. such a dismal darkness as that which reigns in the region of the dead.

SHEEP. Amongst tame animals, the sheep are most frequently mentioned in Scripture, having some properties which render them fit objects of comparison. Thus, in Ex. 34:31, they are the emblems of men. As sheep need a shepherd, so men in a civil state require a ruler, governor, or legislator. It is the same in the associated state as believers in Christ: no church or society could long subsist without pastors. Hence this is the most frequent name of that office in the New Testament; and Christ calls Himself by the same title. See Jn. ch. 10. Ac. ch. 20. 1 Pe. ch. 5, and many other passages.

As mildness and gentleness are the qualities of the sheep, so these are the characteristics of the Christian disciple, whose Master calls upon him to learn of Him, and to be meek and lowly in heart. Mat. 11:19.

Another circumstance of similarity may be noted, as observed by Vitringa, that sheep are nourished for slaughter; and so the primitive followers of the Lamb are described by one of themselves, in Ro. 8:36, applying to the apostles the words used by the Psalmist, in Ps. 44:22, the greater part of which psalm was truly descriptive of the sufferings they underwent in the early times of the gospel, when the martyrs were called to undergo with patience the most severe outrages of their unbelieving fellow-men, and to lay down their lives for the truth's sake.

The proneness of sheep to wander from the fold, is another particular to be observed, in which there is too great a resemblance—a resemblance acknowledged by an Old Testament saint, in Ps. 119:176,

'I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant, for I do not forget thy commandments.'

SHEPHERDS are sometimes put for rulers. See Na. 3:18,

'Thy shepherds slumber, O king of Assyria, Thy nobles dwell in sloth.'

Here the parallelism is plain.

See also Jer. 12:10, and 25:34, to the end. Ez. 34:1, &c., where the negligence of the governors is pointed out as a cause of the incredulity of the people.

SHIELD. The symbol of defence and protection, and of the courage, or sense of security, derived from thence.

It denotes, in a hieroglyphic sense,—

1. The princes or grandees of the earth, who, on account of their rank and elevation, are, or ought to be, the protectors of the people. Ps. 47:9. Ho. 4:18.

2. The spiritual arms of the faithful, fighting under their divine leader. Ps. 91:4. Pr. 30:5. Ep. 6:16.

3. God Himself, who is often called a shield. Ge. 15:1. De. 33:29. Ps. 3:3. 28:7. 84:11. 119:114, and other places.

The materials of shields were anciently wood, covered with skins of beasts, and sometimes with plates of gold or brass. Some were made entirely of these metals. Those of Solomon were of massy gold. 1 K. 10:17. These were carried off by Shishak, king of Egypt, and Rehoboam made others of brass in their stead. 1 K. 14:26,27.

Virgil thus describes the shield of Mezentius, Æn. b. 10, v. 783,

'Tum plus Æneæ hastam Jack, illa per orbem,' &c.

i. e. 'He darted his spear through the concave orb of triple brass, through the linen folds, and the complicated work with three bull-hides inwove.' Tacitus mentions golden shields in his Annals, b. 2; and Diodorus Siculus in his 20th book. Alexander the Great ordered the shields of his soldiers to be covered with silver, and hence they were called Argyropides. Curtius, b. 4, c. 13; Justin, b. 12, c. 7.

The form of shields was various; triangular, oblong, but chiefly round. Homer describes them round, and Virgil uses the phrase 'sub orbis clypei teguntur.' Some of them were sculptured, and contained the names of their generals, and even of their gods. Athenæus mentions the shield of Alcibiades as being made of ivory and gold, and having engraved on it, 'Cupido.' Demosthenes, as Plutarch informs us, inscribed the name of 'Good Fortune' on his.

The ancients were wont to anoint their shields, partly to affect the eyes of their enemies by their brightness, and partly to strengthen the hide with which they were covered. This custom is alluded to by Isaiah, 21:5, 'Rise, O ye princes; anoint the shield.' And some refer to this custom the expression in 2 S. 1:31, 'The shield of Saul, as though it had not been anointed with oil.'

Sometimes the shield was reddened with the blood of enemies, to which Nahum alludes, 2:3. 'The shield of his mighty men is made red; though some suppose that shields were so dyed for the sake of distinction, just as soldiers wear different uniforms; and Tacitus de Mor. Germ. ch. 6, uses the phrase, 'Scuta lectissimis coloribus distinguunt.' Those that were not reddened were accounted inglorious; thus Virgil, Æn. 9, v. 548,

'Parmaque inglorius ætas;' but this may mean that he had no heroic device upon his escutcheon, never having distinguished himself by any valorous action. And Statius has, lib. 5, Silv.

'Nubigeris clypeos, lætæque cadibus arma.'

The use of shields was not merely for defence, but for ornament. They were wont to be crowned with them; to which some suppose Ps. 5:13 alludes—'Thou wilt crown him with thy favor as with a shield.' As the word in the Hebrew is not margin, but time, which signifies something pointed, Mudee is disposed to render it 'a fence of years;' but Parkhurst has shown that it signifies a large kind of shield or target, and was so denominated because the middle part of it projected in a sharp point, and this pointed protuberance was of great service to them, not only in repelling or glancing off missile weapons, but in bearing down their enemies; whence Martial has this allusion:

'In turban incident, cunctos unibone repellat.'

'In crowds his pointed boss will all repel.'

In a note, he mentions that in Scheuchzer's Physica Sacra, there are several representations of these pointed shields. In 1 K. 10:16,17, the targets are plainly distinguished from the shields.

It was thought disgraceful to lose or throw away the shield; wherefore the Spartan mothers, in delivering a shield to their sons, when they went to battle, used to say, 'My son, either this, or upon this;' meaning, either preserve this, or be brought back upon it as on a bier. Ausonius has an epigram on this subject:

'Mater Lacena, clypeo obarmans filium, Cum hoc, inquit, aut in hoc redi.'

Consequently, the shields were firmly held by the hand, that they might neither fall nor be snatched from them; and hence the phrase in Scripture of holding the shield, which we find in 2 Ch. 25:5, and Jer. 46:9.

Shields were wont to be suspended as trophies, either in temples, to the honor of God, or in private houses, for the perpetual remembrance of some remarkable victory. To this Virgil refers in Æn. b. 7, v. 183, *‘Mileaque, protevas sacra in postibus arma, æc.

Epuloaque, clypeaque, cœcœque rostra carina.’*

Sartorius cites an epigram from Pausanias, which was added to a shield suspended in the temple of Minerva:

*‘Hæc ubi Gallorum clypeus rex donat fœdæ (i. e. Miltærv)
Pyrrhus ab audaci rapta tropæa acie,’ æc.*

Vestiges of this custom we find in the sacred writings, when David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadorazer, and brought them to Jerusalem, and dedicated them to the Lord. 1 Ch. 18:7, compared with verse 11. Goliath's shield also, mentioned 1 S. 17:7, was probably no dedicated, since we find his sword deposited with Ahimelech the priest. 1 S. 21:9.

Sometimes shields, and other offensive and defensive armor, were burnt in honor of the supposed god of victory. Among the Romans, this act was an emblem of peace. Among God's people, it might show trust in Him as their defender. See allusions to this custom in Ps. 46:9, ‘He burneth the chariots in the fire.’ What is here rendered chariots, is by the Septuagint and Vulgate rendered shields, and by the Chaldee round shields. See also Jam. 11:6. Na. 2:13. But see especially Ezekiel's description of the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained over Gog and Magog. Ez. 38:8-10.

Ez. 38:8, ‘And lift up the buckler against thee,’ i. e. says Glausius, by a metonymy of the adjunct, ‘He shall bring against thee soldiers, who use shields or bucklers.’ But Michaëlis interprets it, ‘By forming the testudo,’ i. e. a warlike engine, or fence made of boards, covered over with raw hides, under which, as a penthouse, the besiegers of a town got up close to the walls.

Those who wish for further information respecting shields, may compare the Latin synonyms parma, polia, umbo, clypeus, scutum, and the corresponding terms in Greek; as also the writers on the art of war among the ancients.

To be well armed, as Daubuz observes, especially with defensive armor, gives courage, and confidence, and boldness, to attack or undertake any thing. Thus Horace, speaking of the boldness of him that first ventured to sea, says, that his breast was armed with triple brass: b. 1, Ode 3.

In Jb. 41:15, the scales of leviathan, or the crocodile, are called his shields, in the Hebrew; or, as Durell renders it,

*‘The strength of bucklers is his pride,
Shut up, or compacted, as with a close seal.’*

See in Parkhurst, under apek, a description of a crocodile eighteen feet and a half long, whose scales presented this appearance, being formed in parallel ridges, fifty-two in number, with protuberances in the middle, like the umbos or bosses of the ancient shields.

In Ps. 93:18, shield and king are synonymous:

*‘For Jehovah is our shield;
The Holy One of Israel is our King;’*

implying, that rulers are properly the protectors of their people.

In Æschylus, Clytemnestra calls Ægisthus her shield:

*‘Whilst present to my aid Ægisthus stands,
As he hath stood, guarding my a-cial hearth,
He is my shield, my strength, my confidence.’*
See Agamemnon, v. 1443, Pott's Vers.

SHIPS. Merchant ships signify the merchandise and treasure which they bring; and are, therefore, the symbols of profit.

In former times, the ways of trade were generally carried on by means of slaves; and therefore, in the onecriticisms, ships denote riches procured to a person by the labor of his slaves.

Islands, as has been shown, are standing and fixed places of commerce and riches; but ships are only transient, movable instruments to procure and bring them, and therefore ships denote movable riches and wealth.

The security of the righteous, in opposition to the disastrous fate of the wicked, is thus pictured out by Isaiah, 33:21,

*‘But the glorious name of Jehovah shall be unto us
A place of conquest, streams, of broad rivers,
Which no varied ships shall pass,
Neither shall any mighty vessel go through.’*

Of the enemies of God and his people, on the contrary, it is said, verse 23,

*‘Thy walls are loose, they cannot make them fast;
Thy mast is not firm, they cannot spread the ensign.’*

*Then shall a copious spoil be divided,
Even the lame shall utter the prey.’*

Is. 43:14, ‘The Chaldeans exulting in their ships.’ See Lowth, note in loc.

The glory and the increase of the church, by the conversion of the heathen nations, is thus represented by the same prophet, Is. 60:9,

*‘Verily the distant coasts shall awake me,
And the ships of Tarshish among the first,
To bring thy sons from afar,
Their silver and their gold with them.’*

SICKLE. The symbol of destruction. Jo. 3:13, ‘Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe.’

The nations are here compared to ripened fruits, and the time of their destruction to the time of harvest, when men cut their corn and grapes.

The harvest is ripe; i. e. they are fit for destruction, as the ripened corn for reaping.

The wine-press is full; i. e. their wickedness is come to its full measure.

The vats overflow; i. e. (as it immediately follows) their wickedness is great, or arisen to the greatest height.

And in this view Kimchi understands it, who says, it is a similitude to denote the effusion of blood, the time of their death being come, because great is the evil which they have done to Israel, they and their fathers.

Re. 14:14, ‘having in his hand a sharp sickle.’ By this Daubuz understands the representative of the temporal power or powers who are to execute judgment on the territories of the corrupted church. But the expression ‘like unto a Son of man,’ seems to point to Christ Himself, who strikes the blow, who has the chief hand in it, though angels also are sent to accompany Him, and assist in the execution, — to show that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of a divine hand.

For her grapes are fully ripe. This may well mean, that there is an appointed time when the judgment of God shall come on his enemies, as there is in the course of natural providence a time appointed for the season of harvest. The one shall as surely come in its appointed time as the other.

Amongst the ancients, the sickle was an emblem of acute discourse, as Nonnus has it, Χεῖλαιον οὐ καλῶς οὐκ ἀπὸ τῆς ἀλῆθειας ἀλῶν ἀπὸ τῆς.

‘Læbi non arbutus tollens solum loquacem.’

With Euripides (in Hypsipyle), it is the symbol of death. With others, it was the symbol of punishment and execution. Thus Apollon, in his Hælietics, ‘Holding in his right hand a sharp sickle, to inflict punishment.’

See under HARVEST.

SILENCE metaphorically signifies any ceasing from action.

So the moon is said to be silent, when she is in conjunction, and gives no light. Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 16, c. 39, and b. 18, c. 31.

No silence in war, is a cessation from acts of hostility. Livy, b. 37, c. 38.

And so, likewise, when the sun stood still at the prayer of Joshua, Jos. 10:12,13, the sun, in the original, is said to be silent; i. e. not to perform his usual course. And thus, in Pliny, heaven is said to be silent when no wind is stirring. Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 18, c. 38.

Silence, in the Auspicia, was when nothing foreign was observed, which might hinder the true observation of them; and therefore it was a solemn form, before any observation was made, for the augur to ask a proper person if there was silence. Tully de Divinat. b. 2.

During the sacrifices of the heathens, silence was required of all the worshippers, excepting the priests and criens, who only spoke the words of their rituals. This was called Euphonia and Etya, and the formula of the Romans was, Favete lingua. Eurip. Iphig.

Hence, sacrum silentium in Horace, b. 2, Od. 13; and Theophrastus reckons it as part of the character of a filthy fellow to speak when he is sacrificing; so that, if any one made any prayer in the mean time for particular favors to himself, he prayed silently, from which some took the liberty, not being heard, to ask unreasonable things (Persius, Sat. 2, verse 7); on which account, to hinder such foolish and unreasonable prayers, Pythagoras commanded his disciples to speak aloud when they prayed.

As for the Jews, silence was observed in the temple during the offering of incense; at which time the people stood in the courts of the temple, and, falling upon their knees, prayed every man to himself; whereas, during the other parts of divine service, there was a great noise of musical instruments and trumpets. See 2 Ch. 39:25-28. Lu. 1:10. Upon this may be evinced silence before God, and a silent soul, as symbols of praying.

Jer. 47:5, ‘Ashkelon is put to silence.’

As shaving off of the hair and cutting of the flesh were marks of grief and mourning, Jer.

16:6, no silence is likewise expressive of great affliction. Thus Job's friends are said to have sat with him seven days and seven nights upon the ground, without addressing a word to him, because they saw his grief was very great. Jb. 2:13. And so the term is to be understood, Is. 15:1, ‘Moab is brought to silence,’ of Moab's being made speechless with grief and astonishment the night that her cities were spoiled.

Is. 38:10, ‘In the silence of my days,’ i. e. in my days or life being reduced to silence or inactivity, i. e. to death.

Jer. 51:55, ‘destroyeth from out of her a great voice.’

When cities are populous, they are of course noisy. See Is. 22:2. Silence is therefore a mark of depopulation, and in this sense we are to understand God's destroying or taking away out of Babylon the great noise which, during the time of her prosperity, was constantly heard there, — ‘the busy hum of men,’ as the poet expressively calls it. In this manner the mystical Babylon is threatened, Re. 18:23.

*‘And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and pipers, shall be heard no more at all in thee;
And the sound of a millstone
Shall be heard no more at all in thee;
And the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride
Shall be heard no more at all in thee.’*

Very similar to what Jeremiah has in 23:4, ‘And I will cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the cities of Jerusalem, the voice of joy and the voice of mirth,
The voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride,
For the land shall become a desolation.’

See also Jer. 16:9, and 25:10.
Pr. 65:1, ‘Praise is silent before thee, O God, in Zion;’ i. e. submissively and quietly waiteth for Thee, — silence looking to receive mercies, and praise for their being received. The Chaldee paraphrases thus: ‘The praise of the angels is counted as silence before Thee, O God, whose majesty is in Zion.’

The Hebrew term damam, implies hearing to act as well as speech, as in Jer. 8:14, where the prophet advises them to take no measures of resistance, as they would be ineffectually employed against what God had determined.

Re. 8:1, ‘There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour;’ an allusion to the manner of the temple worship, where, while the priest offered incense in the holy place, the whole people prayed without, in silence, or privately to themselves. Lu. 1:10.

Supposed to refer to the tranquillity of the church and empire during Constantine's reign, from 323 to 337, or about 15 years; or, as we explain it, (see King's Marginalia of Crit. vol. i. p. 81, &c.) for 35 years, from 312 to 337. If this period could be precisely ascertained, the length of a prophetic half-hour being so many years, the prophetic hour and day would then be more accurately ascertained also. Thus if the half-hour be 25 years, the whole hour is 50 years, and a great prophetic day will be 1500 years, though the more usual prophetic estimate is a day for a year.

SILVER. The holy orders are compared to silver seven times purified, Ps. 135, and wisdom is preferred to it in several passages, as Jb. 28:15. Pr. 3:14-8:19, &c.

‘The silver cord,’ Ec. 1:6, is understood to mean ‘the spinal marrow.’

SLEEP. The emblem of death. Sleep generally arises from labor and weariness, a long journey, and many toils. Persons who have undergone much, it is easily needful and acceptable. Hence Solomon says, Ec. 5:12,

*‘The sleep of a laboring man is sweet,
Whether he eat little or much.’*

So in Ec. 14:13, the voice says,

*‘Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord.
That they may rest from their labors.’*

The heathen writers have similar images. Thus Euripides in Orestes,

*‘Venerable night,
O thou, who giv'st sweet sleep to men with toil Exhausted, borne on sable phœbus, come!’*

And an unknown author in Stobæus says: — ‘Sleep is not to be procured by couches adorned with ivory and gold, nor yet by purple tapestry, nor by precious props and beds, but by works, by just labors, and the very necessity of nature.’

Sleep is called sweet, on account of its refreshing the weary limbs, and producing a cessation from ordinary toils. Thus Ovid, Metam. b. 11, c. 10,

*‘Somne, quies rerum, placidissima somni
Pax animi, quæ cura fugit, quæ corpora torquet
Phœbus insomniis mœlans, repurgat labor!’*

And Valerius Flaccus, Argon. b. 5,

*‘Nex hominum genus et duræ miseræ laboris
Retulit Somno: optata alacritas robor.’*

So death is described in Scripture as an end to toll. Thus, Jb. 3:17,

'These the wicked cease from troubling,
And these the weary are at rest.'

J. Jb. 14:19.

Till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake,
Nor be raised out of their sleep.

sleep also produces a remission from cares. — Plutarch de Superstitione. — 'Even slaves rest the threats of their masters while asleep.' ep. lightens the irons of the fettered, and ignites inflammations, wounds, and pains. o Jb. 3:18, 19.

'These the prisoners rest together;
They hear not the voice of the oppressor;
The small and great are there,
And the servant is free from his master.'

sleep not merely adds to the strength of the y, but relativizes the mind. Hence Moser calls it, 'the health of the body.' And 'spides makes Orestes say, sleep, thou medicine, who relievest every disease,

e sweetly didst thou come to visit me, n to that hour when most thy help I needed:
verable oblivion of my misery, how art thou ended with oblivion!

i Seneca, in his Hercules Juvens, act. 4,

'Detur quieti tempus, ut somno gravior
Vis victis morbi pectus oppressum levetur.'

It will remember the remark of the disciples ecting Lazarus, Jn. 11:12, 'Lord, if he p, he shall do well.'

a like manner, death brings advantage to faithful. 'To depart and to be with Christ,' s Paul, 'is far better;' to me to die is gain; ile we are in this tabernacle, (the body,) we groan, being burdened.
n sleep, all the senses are benumbed, and longer perform their proper and usual func-ions. Hence Orpheus describes sleep as 'bind-the frame with chains, though not of brass.'
d Virgil, b. 10,

'An iron sleep o'erwhelms his swimming eyes.'
and Homer calls it, 'all-subduing sleep.' So th, or at least its forerunner, old age, is described by Solomon, Ec. ch. 12,

e keepers of the house (the arms) tremble;
a strong man (the limbs) bow themselves;
e grinders (the teeth) cease because they are few;
oe that look out of the windows (the eyes) are darkened;
e daughters of music (the ears) are brought low;
e simoniacs (the gray hairs) flourish;
e sane man greets his long bones,
d the mourners go about the streets.'

sleep is generally enjoyed in a bed, the are also is called by that name. Is. 57:2, hey shall rest in their beds.'

sleep implies waking. So it is said of death, 12:2, 'Many of them that sleep in the dust the earth shall awake, some to everlasting and some to shame and everlasting contempt.'

sleep is a divine bestowment. Ps. 127:2.
Though the Guardian of Israel never slums nor sleeps,' Ps. 121:4, yet sleep is attribu-ed to God, speaking of Him after the manner men, as in Ps. 44:23. Is. 51:9, and similar ages; in all which is meant merely, a sus-sension or delay of divine help and interposition, according to that view of sleep, in which active powers are suspended.

MOKE, considered as hindering or obscuring the sight, may signify gross errors, which cure and darken the understanding.

When considered as a thing of no substance, that quickly disappears, it then signifies am-nity, and the vain promises of courtiers.

When considered as proceeding from incense red to God, it is the same as a cloud of covering or protection.

When considered as proceeding from fire only,
hen signifies, according to the oneirocritics,
raves, anger, punishment, and war.

and agreeably to this, smoke is in Virgil expressed of war, Æn. b. 7, v. 76, 81,
Yet more, when fair Lavinia led the fire
Before the gates, and stood beside her sire,
(Strange to relate!) the flames, involved in smoke
(Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishevelled hair and rich attire,
Her crown and jewels crackled in the fire,
From thence the burning turf began to spread,
And lambent glories danced about her head.'

Dryden.

and in the sacred writings, smoke is for most the adjunct of war and destruction. See 19:28, 'And he looked towards Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain;
I beheld, and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.' Also Jos.
7. Jud. 20:40. Ps. 37:30. and Isaiah 14:31, from the north there cometh a smoke,' i. e.
Lowth observes, a cloud of dust raised by march of Hezekiah's army against Philis-tine, which lay to the south-west from Jerusalem. A great dust raised, has at a distance the resemblance of smoke: 'fumantes pulvere cam-pant.' Virg. Æn. 11, 908.

to which may be added those places where the is said to come out of God's nostrils, as De. 29:22. 2 S. 22:9. Ps. 18:8. 74:1; for that he same as his anger, according to the constant rule of the poets.

'Χολα ποτε μὴν καθύρται.'

Theocr. Idyl. l. 18.

'Disce, and ira cadat naso.'

Persius, Sat. 5, 91.

'Fames et mora bilem in nasum concludunt.'

Plaut. Amphitr. Act. 4.

Hence Virgil,

'Premeina voluit sub naribus ignem.'

Georg. b. 3, v. 98.

And Martial,

'Fumentum nasum vivi tentaverat Urbi.'

L. 8, Ep. 64.

In Pindar, smoke likewise signifies anger.
He says, 'Tis the lot of a good man to bring war against the smoke to them that quarrel;
that is to make peace when men fall out.
Nem. Od. 1.

A house filled with smoke, denotes punishment from persons in authority, or the supreme power. See the Oneirocritics, c. 160.

In Is. 4:5, smoke seems to be connected with images denoting defence: —

'Then shall Jehovah create upon the station of Mount Zion,
And upon all her holy assemblies,
A cloud by day, and smoke,
And the brightness of a flaming fire by night,
Yea, over all shall the glory (the Shechinah) be a covering;

a plain allusion to the pillar of cloud and fire in the wilderness. See Ex. 13:21. 40:38, and
Zch. 2:5.

'The smoking flax will He not quench.' Is.
42:3. Mat. 12:20. Christ will deal tenderly with all who come to Him.

'A perpetually-ascending smoke;' an emblem of future punishment. Re. 14:11, &c.

Re. 15:8, 'And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power,' &c. In the judgment of Korah, the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation, when he and his companions were swallowed up by the earth. Nu. 16:19, 42, 'And when the congregation murmured against Moses and Aaron, this appearance of the glory was the forerunner of judgment.' So that the smoke here is an emblem to express the execution of judgment.

SNOW. The symbol of purity.

Ps. 51:7,

'Wash me, I shall be whiter than the snow.'

La. 4:7,

'Her Nazarites were purer than snow.'

Ps. 68:14,

'When the Almighty scattered kings in it,
It was white as snow in Salmo;

i. e. it was bright and cheering to the victorious party, the people of God. Jos. ch. 12, where the discomfiture of thirty-one kings is mentioned, may throw light on the passage, which is a very difficult one.

Snow being rare in Judea, it was much admired. Hence the son of Sirach speaks of it with a kind of rapture. Ecclus. 43:18, 'The eye will be astonished at the beauty of its whiteness, and the heart transported at the raining of it.'

The Psalmist, 147:16, says, 'He sendeth forth snow like wool.' So Virgil, Georg. l. 397,

'Tenuis nec lana per caelum vellera ferri';

And Martial, b. 4, Ep. 3, v. 1,

'Densum tacturum vellus aquarum.'

Herodotus says, that the Scythians called the flakes of snow, ερρα, feathers, and that those parts which are situated to the northward of their territories, are neither visible nor practicable, by reason of the feathers that fall continually on all sides. For the earth is entirely covered, and the air so full of these feathers, that the sight is altogether obstructed.' L. 4,
c. 7.

Pope, ll. 3, line 284, mentions 'the fleeces of descending snows.'

In some countries, the snow falls in very large flakes.

Jer. 18:14, 'Will the snow leave Lebanon before any rock of the field?' i. e. as Blayney explains it, it would be very unnatural if the snow should quit the tops of Lebanon, whilst the rocks of less height in the adjacent country were covered with it. It is equally monstrous that my people should desert their own God, and adopt the superstitions of a strange idolatry.
But see Parkhurst on Saleg, Heb. Lex. p. 700.
Pr. 31:21.

'She is not afraid of the snow for her household,
For all her household are clothed with scarlet;'

or rather, with double garments, which are a better protection against the cold than scarlet.

Snow, according to the Oriental interpreters, denotes poverty, cares, and torments, and sometimes fertility. And in Persia, as Taver-nier says, they guess at the fruitfulness of the following year by the fall of the snow.

SON. See the people of God so called, in
Ex. 4:29. Ho. 11:1, and perhaps in Ex. 21:10.

SONG. Songs were generally used on occasions of triumph and thanksgiving; such as the song of Moses, at the deliverance from Pharaoh and his host, Ex. 15:1; the song of Israel at the well of Beer, Nu. 21:17; the song of Moses in De. ch. 32; that of Deborah, Jud. 5:12; that of David on bringing up the ark, 1 Ch. 13:8;

that of Hannah, 1 S. ch. 2; of the Virgin, Lu.
1:46; of the four-and-twenty elders, Re. 5:8;
of Moses and the Lamb, Re. 15:3.

But a few, also, were sung on occasions of sorrow; such as that of David on Saul and Jonathan, 2 S. 1:18, &c.; the Lamentations of Jeremiah; and the song he composed on the death of Josiah, 2 Ch. 35:25.

It is said of Tyre, in Ez. 26:13, as one mark of her desolation,

'I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease,
And the sound of thy harp shall be no more heard.'

Songs and viols were the usual accompaniments of sacrifices among the Jews and heathens. Am. 5:23.

'Sacrifica, dulces tibi effundat modos,
Et nives magna vicinas ante aras cadant.'

Senec. Trond.

See Spencer de Leg. Hebr. 1105.

Ec. 12:4, 'And all the daughters of song shall be brought low;' i. e. all the organs which perceive and distinguish musical sounds, and those also which form and modulate the voice;
age producing incapacity of enjoyment, as old Barzillai remarks, 2 S. 19:35. And as Juvenal notes, thus translated by Dryden,

'What music or enchanting voice can cheer
A stupid, old, impotent ear?'

Ps. 68:25 describes the manner of Jewish musical festivities:

'The singers went before,
The players on instruments after;
Among them were the damsels playing with timbrels.'

In Ho. 2:15, singing implies the manifestation of the divine favor, where the Targum says,
'I will work miracles for them and perform great acts, as in the day when they ascended up out of the land of Egypt.'

In this sense, a song denotes a great deliverance, and a new subject of thanksgiving. So a new song, as in Ps. 40:3. Re. 5:9, and elsewhere, implies a new work of salvation and favor, requiring an extraordinary return of gratitude and praise.

SORES, or ULCERS. The symbol of sores, or ulcers, is very analogous to the vices and guilt of the mind. For as the habit or clothing shows the quality and fortune of the person, so the affections of the body can be used only to denote those of the soul. The proximity of the clothing is thought to be sufficient to affect the body, and the close union of the body must certainly affect the soul.

A sore, therefore, signifies an uncleanliness, a sia or vice, proportionable to the properties of the sore. This is thus proved from holy writ:

1. In De. 28:35, an eating sore is said to be the punishment or curse for disobedience. And thus, as in the Hebrew style, the work is taken for the reward, and the reward or punishment for the work, the sore may represent the guilt.
And hence Job's friends, from the greatness of his sores, did agree about the greatness of his sinned sins, and taxed him accordingly.

2. A sore, leprosy, running sore, were the visible marks which not only drove a man from coming into the presence of God, but also forced him to go out of the camp and the society of men. And therefore a sore may very well symbolically represent, that those who are plagued with it, are driven away from the presence of God, and become abominable in his sight, and unfit for the society of Christians, which we know arises not from any bodily infirmity, but from the ulcers of the soul, the sins and wickedness of men.

3. Sores or ulcers symbolically signify sins, because, in the Hebrew phrase, to heal signifies to pardon sins, and to pardon the sin is equivalent to healing. Thus, in 2 Ch. 30:20, Hezekiah having prayed that God would pardon those who had eaten the pasover without being sufficiently purified, 'the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.'

Thus, in Is. 53:5, 'by our Savior's stripes we are healed.'

And in Is. 1:6, wounds, bruises, and sores, are sins; the binding up of them signifies repentance, and the healing, remission.

Agreeably to this, Philo observes, that the leprosy is the symbol of the sins of the soul.

Upon the same principle that sores are sins, the leaves of a tree may be the symbol of remission of sins or divine pardon, and so of divine favor consequent thereupon. And this,

1. As leaves of plants are used medicinally to heal the sores and bruises of bodies.

2. As they have been used in religious purgations or expiations.

In the Mosaic law, there was one general kind of sacrifice commanded for purgation, which consisted of a heifer sacrificed and burnt to ashes, with which and spring water, a leaf was made to serve many sorts of purgations.
When this heifer was burnt, cedar and hyssop with scarlet wool were thrown into the burning, and when purgations were made with the water, a branch of hyssop was used to sprinkle it. Nu. 19:6,18. Also, in the purgation of the leprosy. Le. 14:4,6,7. Hence in Ps. 51:3, 'Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean'; which ceremonial rite is symbolical, and grounded upon the abstractive or purging virtue of the hyssop.

As for the pagans, they used herbs several ways in sacrifices and purgations—grass and branches, thus, or frankincense, myrtle, bay, and cavin; for which see Porphyry de Abstinentia, b. 2, § 5, and Pliny's Nat. Hist. b. 13, c. 1, and b. 15, c. 29. All which practices proceeded from the consideration of the natural virtues of such plants, which by analogy between the ulcers of the body and the sin of the soul, they applied in religious rites, as appears from Proclus and Jamblichus.

3. Leaves serve for a covering, and so may be symbols of a propitiation. Sins, when grievous and ripe for punishment, are said to be before God; what, therefore, covers them, makes a propitiation. On this score, the cloud of the incense which covered the mercy-seat, when the high-priest went into the sanctuary, is said to prevent his death. Le. 16:13. God would have a kind of veil to stand before the high-priest, that he might not, as it were, see God face to face, which was a privilege only granted to Moses. So in Ps. 32:1, 'Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.' And in Ps. 85:3, 'Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, Thou hast covered all their sin.' where pardon and covering explain each other.

Further, sin is nakedness in the style of Scripture, and the consequence of it is shame. Thus in Ex. 32:25, when the people had committed idolatry, Moses saw that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked. So in 2 Ch. 28:19, 'For he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord.' What, therefore, covers man, takes off or at least lessens his shame. When, therefore, Adam had sinned, he endeavored to palliate his shame by covering his body with leaves or boughs. But God, who was merciful, though He cursed him in some things, yet favored him in others; and upon his confession, which was a token of repentance, He clothed him. It is probable that God instructed him to offer up some victims for his sin, and thereupon commanded him to clothe himself with the skins.

HOW. An unclean animal; the symbol of impurity. 2 Pe. 2:22.

It was held in great abomination among the Jews, so that their enemies, such as Antiochus Epiphanes, wishing to affront them, introduced swine among them.

Our Lord in Mat. 7:6, seems, under the name of swine, to have had a certain description of characters in view. Men devoted to sensuality, were disposed to reject the self-denying precepts of the gospel.

SPLITTING. Mat. 23:37, 'Then did they spit in his face'; predicted by our Lord Himself, which showed that He laid stress on that part of his iniquitous usage, in Lu. 18:39, 'He shall be spitefully treated, and spit upon'; predicted long before by the prophet Isaiah, speaking in the person of the Messiah, Is. 50:6, 'My face I hid not from shame and spitting'; an instance, as Lowth observes, of the utmost contempt and detestation.

It was ordered by the law of Moses, in a certain case (see De. 25:9), as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace.

Among the Medes it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence. Herod. i. 99. And so likewise among the Persians. Xenoph. i. p. 18.

Job makes it a complaint in his affliction, Job 30:10, 'They abhor me; they see far from me; They forbear not to spit in my face.'

And Jehovah said unto Moses, 'If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be a hamed seven days?' Nu. 12:14; on which place Chardin remarks, that 'spitting before or spitting upon the ground, in speaking of any one's actions, is through the East an expression of extreme detestation.'

If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity, how much more spitting in his face!

It was a mark of thorough contumely. Petronius, Satyr. p. 51, says, 'familiæque sordidissimam partem ac me convicij jubet.' And a Januam ejectione.' And so Seneca de Const. Sap. cap. 1, 'A rostris usque ad arcum Fabianum per seditiosæ factionis manus tractus, voces improbas et spæta, et omnes alias insaniam b. 4, says, 'But Fulvia, taking the head, threw it down with bitter words and spitting.' And the Christians in the East were wont to spit on the idols of the Gentiles, as a mark of hatred and contempt. So Gregory Abulpar, in his Hist. Dynast., writes, p. 265, 'Tiphurius, a Christian scribe, was hostile to Honorius, and they met at one time in the house of a certain Christian in the city of Bagdad, and there was an image of Christ and his disciples, and a lamp burning before the image. And Honorius said to the master of the house, Why do you waste the oil? This is not Christ nor his disciples, but an image. And Tiphurius said, If they are not worthy of veneration, spit upon them; and he did spit.'

There is a passage in Seneca which shows that spitting was an indignity offered to men condemned to punishment. Thus—'Aristides was led from Athens to punishment, and every one who met him cast down his eyes and groaned; not as if animadverting on this just man, but as if he found fault with justice itself. Yet there was one person found who spat in his face.'

When the ancients happened to meet an insane person, or an epileptic, it was customary to spit at them. See Theophrastus, Characters, cap. 17; Pliny, lib. 28, cap. 4.

STAFF. The staff of bread, on which man leans for support. Le. 26:26. Ez. 4:16, &c. Thus Laetorius,

'Et quoniam non est qualis quod sufficiens armis,
Debit fit corpus, languens omnia membra,
Brachia palpebreque cadunt, popliteus circumobambat.
L. 4, v. 248.

Ho. 4:12,

'My people ask counsel at their stocks,
And their staff declareth to them.'

This refers to the divination by rods or staves, which was anciently practised in the East. On one staff was written, God bids; on the other, God forbids. See Pococke; and under ANXIOUS.

STAR. Stars are symbols of persons in eminent station, and very fitly so, from the height of their own position. Thus, the Star out of Jacob, Nu. 24:17, is coupled with, or explained by, the Scripture out of Israel. In Ge. 37:9, Joseph's brethren are described as eleven stars, their subsequent renown as patriarchs justifying the appellation. In Nu. 24:17, just quoted, where the Hebrew and Greek have a star, the Chaldee expounds it—'A king shall arise out of the house of Jacob'; which interpreters apply first to David, and afterwards to the Messiah. In allusion to this prophecy, that infamous Jewish impostor Bar-cochab, or, as the Romans called him, Barchochebas, who appeared in the reign of Adrian, assumed this pompous title, 'Son of a Star,' as the name implies, as if he were the Star out of Jacob; but this false Messiah was destroyed by the emperor's general, Julius Severus, with an almost incredible number of his deluded followers.

Stars were the symbols of a deity—the star of your god Chilon. Am. 5:26. Probably the figure of a star was fixed on the head of the image of a false god. A Greek scholiast on the place says, 'Erat simulachrum Moabitum cum gemma pellucida et eximia in summa fronte ad figuram Luciferi.' Chias was a name for Saturn, as Spencer affirms.

Plutarch, de Isid. et Osir., tells us, the Egyptian priests affirm of their tutelary deities, not only of those that are immortal, but likewise of their deified heroes, that 'their souls illuminate the stars in heaven.' A star, therefore, was often used, in the Egyptian hieroglyphics, as a symbol of their men-gods. This, as well as rays of light, was their common insignia all over the world. Lucan, 7, v. 458,

'Fulminibus manes, radiis ornabit et astris.'

We are told the same by Suetonius, in his Life of Julius Cæsar: 'In deorum numerum (Cæsar) relatus est; &c.' i. e. he was ranked among the gods, not only by the words of a decree, but in the real persuasion of the vulgar. For during the games, which his heir Augustus gave in honor of his memory, a comet blazed for seven days together, rising always about eleven o'clock. It was supposed to be the soul of Cæsar, now received into heaven; and for this reason a star was added to the crown of his statue.'

When Joseph said, Ge. 37:9, 'I have dreamed a dream, and behold, the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me,' his father, understanding his words in their symbolical and true meaning, rebuked him, and said to him, 'Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed bow down ourselves to thee?' But as the heavenly bodies, mentioned by Joseph, could not appear, even in a dream, as making obeisance to him, we may believe that he saw in his dream, not the heavenly bodies, but a visionary representation of his parents and brethren making obeisance to him; and that, in relating this to his father, he chose, from modesty, to express it in symbolical, rather than in plain language. Besides, as there never was any collection of stars called the eleven stars, the application which Jacob made of that appellation to Joseph's eleven brethren, shows clearly that the word star, in common speech, was used to signify the father of a tribe. Macknight, vol. iii. p. 496.

In Da. 8:10, the stars seem to denote the princes and nobles of a kingdom, who were thrown down and stamped upon by the power, designated by the 'little horn.' 'Stellarum nomine (says Glassius, p. 780) viri illustres et principes intelligentur, qui administratione sua in ecclesiis et republicis aliis prelucent.'

In Re. 8:10,11, a star is said to fall from heaven, by which, in all probability, some king is to be understood as rebelling against another power. This star is called Mars, on account of its bitter consequences. Dantes supposes this star to mean Attila, king of the Huns, who, in A. D. 452, laid waste several provinces of the Roman empire.

Re. 9:1, 'I saw a star fall from heaven to the earth;' i. e. an inferior power revolting against a superior, and this in order to his own aggrandizement. Daubuz affirms this to be Mahomet, who, in 622, began to take the sword in behalf of his own imposture, and became successful. Bishop Newton gives the same interpretation.

Re. 2:28, 'I will give him the morning-star;' i. e. I will bestow on him pre-eminence.

Jb. 38:7,

When the morning stars sang together,
And all the sons of God shouted for joy.

Perhaps this may refer to an opinion that the stars are under the direction of guardian angels. But why the morning stars? Because it was at the time of the creation, the morning of the first day.

Re. 1:20, the pastors of the seven churches are called the seven stars, on account of their office.

Jude, verse 13, the false teachers are described as 'wandering stars,' in allusion to those meteors arising from electrical matter in the air, which blaze and are in motion for a time, but are suddenly extinguished.

Re. 6:13, 'The stars of heaven fell upon the earth;' i. e. some principal ruling powers fell from their authority into a state of subjection.

Bishop Newton considers this to signify the downfall of the pagan Roman empire, when the great lights of the heathen world, the sun, moon, and stars, the powers civil and ecclesiastical, were all eclipsed and obscured, the heathen emperors and Cæsars were slain, the heathen priests and augurs were extirpated, the heathen officers and magistrates were removed, the heathen temples were demolished, and their revenues were appropriated to better uses.

Re. 12:4, 'his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven;' i. e. the power here alluded to, would subdue the governments in the third part of the then known world. Here, as Daubuz observes, the decorum of the symbol is followed; crocodiles, and some great serpents, seizing their prey with their tails.

STING is equivalent to the poison it contains, and transmits into the wound it makes.

In Scripture, poison, lie, error, deceit, curse, gall, and mischiefs, are synonymous; the former being the causes of the latter.

So in Ps. 143, adders poison is under their lips; it is to be explained by lie or curse; as in Ps. 58:3,4, 'They go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent: they are like the deaf adder, that stoppeth her ear.' And in Ps. 14:5, 'With their tongues have they deceived; the poison of asps is under their lips; their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness.' For the sting of the scorpion, see under SCORPION.

STONES. (White Stone.) The most ancient way among the Grecians of giving sentence in courts of judicature, was by black and white pebbles, called ῥηγοί. They were for acquitting a person tried, cast into an urn a white pebble, and those who were for condemning him a black one. Ovid has noticed this custom, Met. b. 15, v. 41,

'Mox erat antiqua, nervis atque impellis,
His damnare reos, illic absolvere culpa.'

'Black and white stones were used in Greece past
These to acquit the prisoner, those to cast.'

The like was done in popular elections; the white pebbles being given by way of approbation, and the black ones by way of rejection. The ballot of the present day is something similar.

Hence a white pebble or stone becomes a symbol of abolition in judgment, and of conferring honors and rewards. Re. 2:17.

The symbol of a stone cut out of a mountain without hands is used in Da. 2:34, and may be thus explained:—

A mountain has been shown to signify sym-lically a kingdom or empire. Now, a mountain consists of stones united together. By the use of analogy, stones, therefore, must signify several peoples of which a kingdom or empire, represented by a mountain, is composed. It, therefore, a stone cut out of a symbolical mountain will be a people to be formed out of the kingdom represented, and to be (for as much as the cutting denotes a separation) of a different nature from the rest of the people, of which the said kingdom consists. And it is said to be done without hands, which signifies that the said people would be of a different nature, when men were not aware of its being such thing; and that it would be done without any visible worldly support or assistance.

Zch. 9:16,
*And Jehovah shall save them;
 that day shall he save his people as sheep, and the consecrated stones shall be set up as a standard in his land;*

reference to heaps of stones, set up by way memorial, and consecrated to that particular use; i. e. as monuments of victory. See 1 S. 12. 'Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eben-ezer, saying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us.' Eben-ezer signifies the stone of help. See also 2 S. 30:8; and Virgil, ec. ge. b. 3.

'Statue of Parli lapides sprantia signa.'
 Strabo, Geogr. b. 3, mentions, that 'It was customary amongst the ancients to mark the sites of their victorious progress by altars or altars of stones.' And Xenophon, Anabasis, 4, records, that 'an immense pile of stones' as erected by the Greeks, on their return on the expedition to Asia.

Stones of this kind were wont to be consecrated by pouring oil upon them. See Ge. 3:18. They were also crowned with garlands; but of this there is no mention in scripture.

STORK. A well-known bird, remarked for its natural affection, and for other qualities. It is a bird of passage.

It is mentioned in several passages of Scripture; among others, in Jer. 8:7.

Even the stork in the heavens knoweth her stated times, and the turtle-dove, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the seasons of their coming: But my people have not discerned the judgment of Jehovah.

'In the end of autumn,' says a Danish author, 'the storks, not being able to bear the winter of Denmark, gather in a great body about the sea-coasts, as we see swallows do, and go off together: the old ones leading, the young brood in the centre, and a second body of old ones behind. They return in spring, and betake themselves in families to their several nests.'

It is this quality of foresight and anticipation of the seasons, of which the sacred writer takes the stork the symbol, and which he employs as a ground of reproach against the Jews; in the same manner as our Lord reproaches the Pharisees (Mat. ch. 16) with being able to discern the face of the sky, but not to discriminate the signs of the times.

As these birds shun the winter instinctively, the people of God, when they see the coming of divine judgments, should make preparation to escape from them, by repentance or otherwise.

And as these birds return in spring to their former abodes, so God's people ought to distinguish the times and periods which He has reserved for the duration of his judgments.

It is the wish of God that his people should be so employed; and it is their interest and duty not to be indifferent spectators of the signs of the times, that they may escape the visitations which impend over others.

SUN, MOON, AND STARS. Whenever a scene of government is laid, whether in a civil or ecclesiastical state, or in that of a single family, the sun, moon, and stars, when mentioned together, denote the different degrees of power or governors in the same state. This is evident, in relation to a single family, from Joseph's dream, Ge. 37:10, where sun, moon, and stars, are interpreted, of his father, his brothers, and his wife, the head of his family; and of his sons, the lesser members.

And as to a kingdom, the Oriental onirocritics, ch. 167, jointly say, that the sun is the symbol of the king, and the moon of the next to him in power. And therefore the stars, when mentioned together with the sun and moon, must denote governors or rulers of an inferior rank, but next in power to him who is the chief person in the government.

And therefore the stars, in the symbolical character, which, taken from the appearance things, and their proportion, being to the lesser luminaries, signify, according to the interpreters, inferior princes or governors.

And thus Hippolytus, prince of Athens, is called a star by Euripides. Hippol. v. 1130.

When a king is not compared with his own nobles or princes, but with other kings, a star may be his symbol. Thus, in Is. 14:17, the king of Babylon is represented by the morning-star. For, as it is brighter than the rest of the stars, and is the forerunner of the sun, and so shows a power preceeding in time the rest of the night, so the king of Babylon was greater in power and dignity than other kings, and the monarchy established in Babylon was the first that was established in the world.

A setting sun is the symbol of a declining and perishing power; a rising sun, of a rising power or government.

Whatever comes from the rising of the sun betokens some fortunate accident, according to Artemidorus, b. 3, c. 36. It is a good and prosperous omen, and betokens assistance.

Thus, in 2 S. 23:4, the favor and protection of God to his people is compared to the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds.

For, as in Ho. 6:5, light is the symbol of God's government, so the dawning of it, in the rising of the sun, is the beginning of his favor and deliverance, which is to go forwards to greater perfection.

Hence Solomon says, Pr. 4:18, 'The path of the just is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day.' And again, Job 29:7, 'The lamp or light of Jehovah is the breath of man; i. e. the favor of God keeps men alive, makes them active, vigorous, and prosperous.'

In Is. 58:8, it is said,

'Then shall thy light break forth as the morning,
 And thine health shall spring forth speedily.'

The health implies forgiveness of sins, and the light of the morning, a deliverer. That is, God will send a Deliverer, and forgive the sins of his people, or remit the punishment.

So also in Is. 60:1,2,

'Arise, shine, for thy light is come,
 And the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee, &c.'

The Light or Deliverer here is the Messiah, who, to the church of Israel, is the Aurora, the day-spring, east, or sun-rising, as well as the light of the world, Zch. 3:8. Ma. 4:2. Jn. 1:4, &c., and is therefore called the Sun of righteousness.

All which agrees with the words of Zacharias, Lu. 1:78,79, 'Whereby the day-spring, Aurora, from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace.' For the words, 'to sit in darkness and in the shadow of death,' signify, to be in slavery and subjection; in allusion to an Eastern custom still in practice, of putting the slaves in prisons, or pits under ground, where they are locked up every night. And sometimes they were blinded, as appears from Jud. 16:21, and from the custom of the Scythians, related by Herodotus, b. 4, § 2. Those that were designed for work elsewhere, were every morning taken out of the dungeon, and sent to their labor.

Now, as the day-spring delivers them from that place, at least for a time, so it is a proper symbol of release from slavery, according to the subject spoken of. Thus in Is. 42:6,7,

'I will give thee for a covenant to the people,
 For a light to the nations,
 To open the eyes of the blind,
 To bring the captive out of confinement,
 And those that dwell in darkness from the dungeon.'

See to the same purpose Is. 49:9. And thus also it is said, Ps. 45:14, 'The upright shall have dominion over them in the morning;' that is, when God comes to judge the cause of the upright, that have been in oppression, and sets them at liberty, then shall the upright in their turn subdue the wicked.

And there is this further conformity of the expression to the nature of the thing, that justice was executed, and causes tried in courts in the morning, as appears from Jer. 21:12; so that the morning is the proper time of judgment, and courts of justice met then,—the places in which slaves were either delivered to their masters by sentence for payment, or else set at liberty, such causes being there managed; as is evident from Ex. 21:6.

So Tyndarus, in Plautus, being taken out of the quarry-pits, says, 'Lucis das tuendæ copiam,—you release me from my slavery.' Capt., act. 5, sc. 4, v. 11.

God Himself is called a sun. Ps. 84:12.

And Jesus Christ calls Himself the light of the world; i. e. the sun of the world. Jn. 8:12.

Deborah, in her song, makes the sun the symbol of believers in God: 'Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might.' Jud. 5:31.

The sun may be considered to be an emblem of divine truth, respecting which the apostle says, Ep. 5:13, 'But all things that are re-proved are made manifest by the light, for light is that which doth make things manifest.' As light is not only manifest in itself, but makes other things manifest, so one truth detects, and reveals, and manifests another, as all truths are dependent on, and connected with each other, more or less.

As the sun is the supreme material light, so that when he rises all other lights disappear; so when God teaches, whether by reason or by revelation, all other teaching appears valueless, and every other monitor seems silent, that the voice of God alone may be heard.

As it is the same sun that illuminates all parts of the earth, so whatever nations throughout the whole habitable globe are instructed by God, it is the same truth by which they are instructed; for God does not teach differently in different places. Truth is no geographical thing, affected by latitudes, climates, or the like.

As the light of the sun is one, pure, and undivided, for the spots we seem to discover on his disk, are probably not on, but collected around the sun; so it is said of God, 1 Jn. 1:5, 'God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all; i. e. He is exempt from all error, deceit, injustice, imperfection, and all light derived to the creatures, proceeds solely from Him.'

The light of the sun was considered anciently to have a sanative and vivifying power; and Macrobius mentions (Saturn. 1, cap. 17) when treating of Apollo, that the vestal virgins were wont to address him in this manner—'O Apollo Medicine—O Apollo the physician;' and we find Jesus spoken of as the Sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings; i. e. in his beams. And hence John says, 'In Him was life, and the life was the light of men.' 1:4.

Amongst the ancients, the sun was considered to be the symbol of a king. So Gordian, Hadrian, Aurelian, are represented on coins under the figure of the sun, with the inscription—'Oriens. Aug. sive soli invicto, Soli victo Comiti,' &c.

In the Jewish writings we often find this title applied to the Messiah. Thus in Rabboboth, fol. 149, 'They said unto him, No, unless when the sun shall come, i. e. the Messiah, as it is written, And to you who fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise.' And Raschi on Is. 30:26, where he says, 'Jonathan interprets it, when light shall come to the just:—this is said of the two lights of deliverance from Babylonish and Roman captivity; i. e. the Messiah, whom they feigned to themselves to be such a deliverer.'

SWORD. The symbol of war and slaughter, as appears from numerous passages of Scripture, especially in the prophetic books. See Is. 34:5. Ez. ch. 21, &c. Re. 19:17,18.

Le. 26:25, 'I will bring a sword upon you; i. e. I will cause war to come.'

Ge. 27:40, 'By thy sword thou shalt live; i. e. thou shalt support thyself by war and rapine.'

2. It is the symbol of the divine judgments. See De. 32:41, &c.

Also, of the instrument whom God employs to execute his judgments. Ps. 17:13, 'The wicked, who is thy sword.'

3. It is the symbol of power and authority. Rom. 13:4, 'He beareth not the sword in vain.'

This is spoken agreeably to the notions and customs of the Romans at the time when the apostle wrote. Thus, not more than ten or twelve years after the date of this Epistle, Vitellius, when he resigned the empire, gave up his daggers, which he had taken from his side, to the attending consul, thus surrendering the authority of life and death over the citizens. See Tacitus, b. 3, c. 68, and Suetonius in Vitell. cap. 15.

So the kings of Great Britain are not only, at their inauguration, solemnly girt with the sword of state, but this is afterwards carried before them on public occasions.

4. It is the symbol of unjust violence. Mat. 26:52, 'All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword.'

Our Lord uses it in opposition to peace; Mat. 10:34, 'I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword;' which Luke, 12:51, expresses by the word division: i. e. men would so abuse his doctrine, as to make it the occasion of violent contentions; but as to its proper design and its natural tendency, the angels proclaimed it at his appearance in the flesh, that it was to send 'peace on earth.'

The Egyptians, those great masters of symbolical learning, called Osiris, king of Persia, a cruel conqueror to them, by the name of a sword. See Plut. de Isid. et Osir. p. 304, quoted by Dehser.

In many authors, the sword is the symbol of death or destruction. Thus Euripides says, Helena. v. 890.

The sword shall reach thee, not my sepulchral bed.

5. The word of God is often in Scripture compared to a sword; as by Paul in Ep. 6:17, 'And the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God;' i. e. the spiritual sword of the word, the knowledge of which not only separates them from evil affections, but teaches them to discern between truth and falsehood; guards the Christian from the influence of corrupt and destructive doctrines, and destroys the influence and force of the most artful and delusive errors.

So in He. 4:12, 'The word of God is quick and powerful, (or living and energetic,) sharper than any two-edged sword.' And in Ho. 6:5, the word of God is said to destroy all his enemies:

*Therefore have I hewn them by the prophesy;
I have slain them by the words of my mouth;
And my judgments have been as the light when it goeth forth.*

On which passage see Newcome's notes.

See also Is. 49:2, and Lowth's excellent note there, in which, inter alia, he remarks, 'The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just.' It is said of Pericles by Aristophanes,

*His powerful speech
Placed the hearer's soul, and left behind,
Deep in his bosom his keen point infused.*

Pindar is particularly fond of this metaphor, and applies it frequently to his own poetry. See Olymp. 3, 160 and 149, and Olymp. 9, 17, where he calls his verses swords, to denote their acute and opposite application.

So, in Ac. 2:37, the words of Peter are said to have 'pierced the hearts of his hearers.' Jer. 47:3, 'Ho, sword of Jehovah, &c.' The Babylonian monarch seems to be addressed by this title, as the Assyrian was by that of 'the rod of God's anger,' Is. 10:5; such conquerors being the appointed executioners of the divine judgments. Compare Ex. 14:17, and 21:3, &c.

In the vision related by John, Re. 1:16, of one like unto the Son of man, it is said, 'out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword,' in conformity to Isaiah's expression already referred to, Is. 49:2, 'He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword;' a character belonging exclusively to Him who is Himself 'the Word of God.'

T.

TABERNACLE. The tabernacle, among the Jews, was the symbol of God's presence, and consequently of his protection, and of his church, to whom that protection was vouchsafed. So that it prefigured the Christian church as in favor with God, and under his protection, but in an unsettled condition. Ac. 7:44. He. 8:5, 9:24.

The tabernacle of the Jews, on account of the Shechinah dwelling in it, was a type of the body of Christ, in whom dwell all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and who was therefore on earth the tabernacle of God with men.

See TEM.

Tabernacle is also used to denote the human body, which, though the residence of an immortal spirit, is constituted of frail and slight materials, and is shortly to be by death taken down and dissolved. 2 Co. 5:1,4. Wis. 9:15. Amos has a remarkable passage, quoted in Ac. 15:16,

*In that day I will raise up the fallen tabernacle of David, And I will close up the breaches thereof;
And I will raise up its ruins,
And I will build it as in the days of old;
That the residue of men may seek Jehovah,
And all the heathen over whom my name is called,
Saieth Jehovah, who doeth this.* Am. 9:11,12.

By the tabernacle of David, he elegantly expresses the kingdom or real dignity of David in the person of the Messiah ruling over the church.

The mansion of the sun in heaven is called by the Psalmist a tabernacle. Ps. 19:4.

TAIL. Tail, in holy writ, is used symbolically to signify two things which meet frequently both together in one subject, the one being the cause of the other.

It signifies subjection or oppression under tyranny. So this symbol is used and explained by God Himself in De. 28:13, where He promises blessings to the obedient: 'And the Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail, and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath.'

And thus, in the Oriental onirocritics, the tail of a beast, as being the part that follows or comes behind, signifies the retinue, honor, dignity, and riches, of the subject concerned; ch. 233, 236.

2. The other signification of tail is, when it signifies a false prophet, impostor, or deceiver, who infuses the poison of his doctrine, which brings on a curse, as the scorpion doth with his tail.

Thus in Is. 9:14,15, 'The Lord will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day.' The ancient and honorable he is the head, and the prophet that teacheth lies he is the tail.' So again, Is. 19:15, 'Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush may do;' that is, neither the power of the prince, nor the devices of the false prophets and enchanters shall avail any thing.

By this may be explained the symbolical meaning of that great miracle exhibited to Moses of the serpent transformed out of his staff, and into it again; which was to assure him of his power to overcome the Egyptians. The staff was thrown upon the earth and turned into a serpent, at which Moses was frightened, to show what terror he and the Israelites were in at the sight of Pharaoh, the great Egyptian dragon. He is ordered to take it by the tail, and it was turned into a staff, to show that he would overcome the tail of the serpent, the false prophets, and retinue of Pharaoh, and by that victory get into his power a sceptre or authority to govern the Israelites. Ex. 3:3,4.

To the same purpose was the second miracle wrought in consequence of that, when the rod of Moses, turned into a serpent, Ex. 7:9,12, swallowed up those of the magicians; for that plainly showed and signified the power of Moses to overcome the magicians in their enchantments, and to rescue Israel out of their hands.

TEARS. Is. 25:8, 'And the Lord Jehovah shall wipe away the tear from off all faces.'

Re. 7:17, 'And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.'

See also Re. 21:4.

Tears are the well-known emblems and usual accompaniments of grief; and as grief is generally most violent when it is indulged for the dead, so here, in two of the above passages, the wiping away of tears is connected with the abolition of death.

Is. 25:8, 'He shall utterly destroy death forever.'

Re. 21:4, 'And there shall be no more death.' Tears are wont to be poured out on occasions of mortality. Thus:

Jer. 31:15,

*A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping,
Rachel weeping for her children,
Refused to be comforted for her children,
Because they were not.*

Jer. 22:10,

*Weep ye not for the dead, neither to bemoan him,
But weep sore for him that goeth away,
For he shall return no more, nor see his native country.*

Tears are sometimes shed for national calamities. Thus:

Is. 1:3,

*She weepeth sore in the night,
And her tears are on her cheeks.*

Nut. 14:1,

*And all the congregation lifted up their voice and cried,
And the people wept that night.*

Tears are sometimes the offspring of painful suspense and anxiety. Thus Cicero, Ep. b. 14, Ep. 3, 'Accepti ab Aristocrato tres epistolae, quas ego lacrymis prope delevi. Conficior enim morore, mea Terentia.'

And Ovid has

Est quoniam ferre voluptas, Expletur lacrymis egrotique dolor.

And David, Ps. 42:4,

*My tears have been my meat day and night,
While they continually say to me, Where is thy God?*

And Ps. 80:5,

*Thou hast led them with the bread of tears,
And givest them tears to drink in great abundance.*

Ps. 109:9,

*For I have eaten ashes like bread,
And mingled my drink with weeping.*

And Hagar's pitiable case is thus described in Ge. 21:15,16, 'And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs. And she went and sat her down over against him a good way off, as it were a bow shot; for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lifted up her voice and wept.'

A Greek poet in the Anthology thus bewails his condition:

Δακρυχέων γέννην, καὶ δακρύων ἀποθήκη,
εἰ. τ. λ.

which may be thus rendered in Latin:

*Lacrymans sum nativae et lacrymarum morior,
In lacrymis universum comperi vitam.
O genus hominum lacrymans, debile, miserabile,
Fractum in terra solutusque.*

Tears are often the symbol of divine judgments, as they are sometimes also of human oppressions. Ec. 4:1. Ac. 30:19. Jer. 14:17.

They are sometimes the fruit of repentance and contrition. See He. 12:17. Mat. 5:3.

And commonly the result of natural affection, deploring a beloved object, of which examples are too obvious and numerous to cite. There is a singular inscription in Arago's Roma Subterr. cap. 30—'Tempore Adriani imperatoris, Marius adolescens dixit matri suae salutem vixit, dum vitam pro Christo cum sanguine consummisit, in pace tandem quiescit. Nec inerte cum lacrymis et meta posuerunt.'

Whatever the causes of tears to the righteous, all these shall be abolished, which a visit is meant by 'God's wiping away all tears from their eyes.' For death, oppression, calumny, repentance, shall have no place in the heavenly region. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. There is now in tears shall reap in joy.

TEETH are frequently used in Scripture as the symbols of cruelty, or of a devouring enemy.

Thus, in Pr. 30:14, 'There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.'

So David, to express the cruelty of tyrants, Ps. 56:6, prays to God 'to break out the pest teeth of the young lions.'

So God, threatening the Israelites for rebellion, De. 32:24, says, 'I will also rend the teeth of beasts upon them.'

And David, Ps. 57:4, compares the teeth of wicked men to spears and arrows. 'My soul,' saith he, 'is among lions, and I lie as among them that are set on fire, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.'

See Ps. 3:8, 58:7, 134:6, Jb. 29:17.

There are various places of the New Testament in which future punishment is set forth under the symbol of gnashing of teeth, Mat. 8:12, 13:42, 25:30, Lu. 12:35. From these it would appear to denote despair, or a want of the hopefulness of their condition.

So Virgil, Aen. 6, v. 557,

*Hinc exardenti genibus et arva manu; hinc

*From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pain of scorching lashes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood unmoved at this cry.
And raised his guide, from whence these words are.
And what the crime, and what the torments were,
And loud laments that rent the liquid air.* Dryden

The phrase may also denote envy, or a want of the happiness of others.

Ps. 112:10,

*The wicked shall see it, and be grieved,
He shall gnash with his teeth and melt away.
The desire of the wicked shall perish.*

Horace uses the expression, b. 4. (Ode 1)

Ex jam devit nimis nocetum amicum.

It is also a mark of malignity and envy. Thus Ac. 7:54, 'they gnashed on Stephen with their teeth.' See also Jb. 16:9. Bezaud, in his Shield of Hercules, v. 403, applies it to the fury of wild beasts—

*As two grim lions, for a robbet slain,
Wroth in convention roars, and down berit;
The sound of roaring and of clanking web.
Arist.

It may include horror and mourning at learning their doom. See Mat. 26:41. See Lu. mer, II. 93, v. 101.

*Like a slain animal he sees the specter by,
And hears a flexible, horrible cry.*

See Re. 16:9,10,11.

TEMPLE. Temple and tabernacle, as we are opposite.

A tabernacle or tent denotes an unsettled state, from the use of tents in places where men travel and have no settled habitations.

And thus, whilst Israel was in the desert, and even in Canaan, till the moment of what was promised to Abraham for three ages was fulfilled, God had a movable tabernacle, and therefore said of Himself that He also walked in a tent and in a tabernacle. 2 S. 7:6.

But, on the contrary, when the Israelites were fully settled in the promised land, God had them, to show his Abode abode with him; standing house, palace, or temple built for him; and to make up the notion of dwelling or habitation complete, there were to be all things suitable to a house belonging to it.

Hence, in the holy place, there was to be a table and a candlestick, because this was the ordinary furniture of a room. The table was to have its dishes, spoons, bowls, and covers, and to be always furnished with bread upon it; and the candlestick to have its lamp continually burning.

Hence, also, there was to be a continued fire kept in the house of God, upon the altar in the focus of it.

And, besides all this, to carry the notion still farther, there was to be some constant meat and provision brought into this house, which was done in the sacrifices, that were partly consumed by fire upon the altar, as God's own portion and meat, and partly eaten by the riests, who were God's family, and therefore to be maintained by Him.

Besides the flesh of the beast offered up in sacrifice, there was a mishka made of flour and oil, and a libamen that was always joined with the daily sacrifice, as the bread and drink which was to go along with God's meat.

It was also strictly commanded that there should be salt in every sacrifice, because all meat is unsavory without salt.

Lastly, all these things were to be consumed on the altar only by the holy fire that came down from heaven, because they were God's portion, and therefore to be eaten or consumed by Himself in an extraordinary manner.

From all this it appears that the building of the temple was wholly designed to make a durable and permanent mansion for God, and consequently for his worship; — a rest for the soul, a settlement for the feet of God, as David designed it, 1 Ch. 28:2; and as God Himself did declare it to David by the prophet Nathan, 1 Ch. 17:15, 19.

And therefore the word temple, when used symbolically, is the symbol of the Christian church since its settlement.

In the oneroicritics, a temple is interpreted of the house of the king, which agrees with the Jewish temple being a house or palace for God, as the king or monarch of the Jews.

As a tabernacle denotes an unsettled state of the church, so even the symbol of temple may come under the notion of a tabernacle whenever the church is in a weak, declining condition. Thus, in Jer. 10:20, when the Jewish nation was reduced to such a state that the temple was to be destroyed, and the people led into captivity, the temple is spoken of under the symbols of tabernacle and curtains, to show that the temple was, as it were, tottering, and as unsettled as a tabernacle. The like opposition is to be seen in Am. 9:11, where the kingdom or house of David in oppression comes under the notion of a tabernacle. The opposition between a house and tabernacle appears in Pr. 14:11,

'The house of the wicked shall be overthrown;
But the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.'

The meaning is, the most flourishing state of the church shall have an end, but the upright, from a low, oppressed condition, shall be exalted to honor and happiness.

And thus Paul, comparing this life and its unsettled state with the certainty and perpetuity of the next, calls the first 'our earthly house of this tabernacle,' subject to dissolution, adding, but 'in this tabernacle we groan being burdened;' but the other is 'a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens,' 2 Co. 5:1. So in He. 13:13, 14, we have the symbols of a camp and city opposed, which bear the same proportion to each other as tent and temple.

TEN. Ten, according to the style of the Scriptures, may have besides the signification of that determinate number, that also of an indefinite one, yet so as not to imply either a very great number, or a very small one.

See Ge. 31:7, 41, where ten times means many times; Le. 26:36, ten women are many women; Ec. 1:8, ten sons are many sons; Ec. 7:9, ten men are many men. See also Da. 1:20. Am. 6:1. Zch. 8:23.

And so in several places of Plautus, ten signifies many. Mercat. act. 2, sc. 3, v. 2; act. 4, sc. 2, v. 3. Stich. act. 3, sc. 2, v. 41; Amphitruon, act. 2, sc. 1, v. 27.

Re. 2:10, 'Ye shall have tribulation ten days.' Ten days (says Lowman), I conceive, is not to be understood literally, — a short time of affliction, indeed! hardly agreeable to a description of that tribulation this prophecy seems to reprove the church for.

So ten thousand words, 1 Co. 14:19, are put for an indefinite number, or for a prolix discourse.

And ten thousand, or a myriad, is frequently used in the same indefinite sense. See 1 S. 18:7, 'Saul hath slain his thousands, and David slain his thousands.'

That ten is a favorite number in Scripture, may be seen in many passages, viz. Ge. 24:10, Abraham's servant took ten camels; verse 22, Isaac took ten shekels; Ge. 32:15, Jacob took ten bulls and ten goats for Esau; Ex. 2:1, make a tabernacle with ten curtains; 1 S. 17:17, 'ten loaves;' verse 18, 'ten cheeses;' 2 S. 5:5, 'Naaman took ten talents, and ten changes of raiment;' Mat. 25:1, the parable of the ten virgins; Da. 7:7, the fourth beast, or great monarchy, had ten horns; Re. 12:3, John saw a dragon having ten horns. See also Re. 13:1. 17:3, 12, 16.

These have been explained to mean ten distinct kingdoms, that should arise in several parts of the Roman empire, and lists have been given of them by different interpreters. But as these kingdoms were shifting and variable, it may be well not to understand the number ten too precisely, but simply that several new kingdoms were erected when the northern nations divided the empire among themselves, which is a well-known fact.

TERAPHIM were idols of the human form.

In Syriac, terep signifies to inquire, and, in Arabic, to abound with the goods of life. Teraphim may therefore denote images to inquire of, or to bestow, good things. Spencer thinks the word equivalent to seraphim, a celestial order, by the usual substitution of tau for shin in the Eastern tongues. Whatever they were, they appear to have been objects of idolatrous worship. Yet we find them in use both among believers and unbelievers. See Ge. 31:19, 34, 35. Jud. 17:5. 18:14, 18, 20. 1 S. 19:13, 16; and in 2 K. 23:24. Ez. 21:21. Zch. 10:2. Comp. 1 S. 15:23. Ho. 3:4.

From these, as Parkhurst observes, the heathen of various nations appear to have had their penates, or household gods; as the Tyrians, Arcadians, and Trojans, from whom the Romans derived theirs.

THIGH is the part on which the sword of a warrior is hung. See, to this purpose, Ex. 32:27. Jud. 3:16, 21. Ps. 45:3. Song 3:8. Homer, Il. 1, 900.

In another sense, the thigh is the symbol of offspring. Thighs, literally taken, are explained by the interpreters of kinsmen.

A third symbolical signification of thigh may be taken from the custom in the time of the patriarchs — when a man imposed an oath upon another to secure his promise, he made him put his hand under his thigh. Abraham thus adjured his servant, Ge. 24:2, 9. And Jacob adjured Joseph that he should not bury him in Egypt, Ge. 47:29.

This is still practised in the East, as some authors tell us. In 1 Ch. 29:24, according to the original, 'the putting of hands under Solomon' is a ceremony of homage and obedience, whereby the person swearing gave the greatest token of his design to be faithful.

Jer. 31:13, 'I smote upon my thigh.'

Smiting upon the thigh was an indication of inward sorrow and compunction. See Ez. 21:12. So also in Homer's Iliad, 2, 124,

'Divine Achilles weds the rising flames,
And smote his thigh, and thus aloud exclaims,
Arm, arm, Patroclus!'

Re. 19:16, 'And on his thigh a name written;' i. e. on one part of the garment which covered his thigh, the place where the sword is usually worn, a motto or inscription was observed, on which He was styled 'King of kings, and Lord of lords,' to signify that He was really possessed of a just dominion over all the princes and kingdoms of the earth.

THREE frequently signifies, in the sacred writers, greatness, excellency, and perfection. It is thus used in Is. 19:23, 'In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Assyria;' i. e. great, admired, beloved, and blessed, as it there follows. So in Pr. 2:20, according to the original, 'Have I not written unto thee three things?' which our version renders excellent things. But all the ancient versions read three times, as Durell remarks, referring probably to the three books that bear Solomon's name. See also Job. 8:6, and Ho. 8:12.

So three, shelish, in Ps. 80:6, and Is. 40:12, is a great measure. And so the third in order signifies a hero or great man, as in Ex. 14:7, and 15:4. 2 K. 7:3-9:25. See also 1 K. 9:22. Ez. 23:15.

In the Latin and Greek tongues, the number three is also mystical, and often signifies many, and does not so much imply an exact number, as a great increase.

Whether their attachment to the number three, as Potter observes, was owing to its supposing perfection, because, containing a beginning, middle, and end, it seemed to signify all things in the world; or whether to the esteem the Pythagoreans and some other philosophers had for it, on account of their trinity; or lastly, to its aptness to signify the power of all the gods, who were divided into three classes, celestial, terrestrial, and infernal, I shall leave to be determined by others. Thus much is certain, that the ancients thought there was no small force and efficacy in unequal numbers, whence we find three fatal sisters, three furies, three names and appearances of Diana, three sons of Saturn, among whom the empire of the world was divided; and for the same reason we read of Jupiter's fulmen tridentem, Neptune's trident, with several other tokens of the veneration they had for this number.

Hence triple signifies three great, that is, very great. And in Horace, b. 1, Od. 1, triple honors are many honors.

The repetition of a word, sentence, or petition three, is a token of great earnestness; as in Jer. 22:29,

'O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of Jehovah.'

Ez. 21:27,

'I will overturn, overturn, overturn it.'

It was a great emphasis when our Savior told Peter that he should deny Him thrice. So Paul, to show the earnestness of his prayers, says that, 'he besought the Lord thrice.' 2 Co. 12:8. So our Savior prayed three times in his agony, that the cup might pass from Him. Mat. 26:44.

The heathen, to show their sorrow for the death of their kinsmen, called upon them thrice.

In Pindar, there is an allusion to some old custom of saluting a king thrice at his inauguration. And the acclamations in the Roman theatres seem also to have been commonly repeated thrice. And so in the senate-house, of which there is an instance and form in Vulp. Gallicanus, in these words —

'Antonine Pie, Dii te servent;
Antonine Clemens, Dii te servent;
Antonine Clemens, Dii te servent.'

THRESHING is always, in the prophets, a symbol of the punishment or destruction of the subject concerned; as in Is. 41:15. Jer. 51:33. Am. 1:3. Mi. 4:13. Ha. 3:12; and in Is. 21:10, 'O my threshing, and the corn of my floor;' signifies, as explained by the Septuagint, 'people afflicted, forsaken, and grieved.'

See the different methods of threshing in ancient times, described by Bishop Lowth, in his note on Is. 28:27, 28, who thus paraphrases the passage above alluded to, in 21:10 — 'O thou, the object upon which I shall exercise the severity of my discipline, that shalt lie under my afflicting hand, like corn spread upon the floor to be threshed out and winnowed, to separate the chaff from the wheat;' and he adds, 'The image of threshing is frequently used by the Hebrew poets, with great elegance and force, to express the punishment of the wicked, and the trial of the good, or the utter dispersion and destruction of God's enemies.'

THRONE. The symbol of a kingdom or government.

Thus, in holy Scripture, throne is put for kingdom. Ge. 41:4, 'According to thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in the throne will I be greater than thou.' In 2 S. 3:10, kingdom and throne are set synonymously, 'to translate the kingdom from the house of Saul; and to set up the throne of David over Israel.' And both together, as in 2 S. 7:13, 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever.'

And thus God, to represent himself symbolically as king of the Jews, had the mercy-seat with the cherubim about it, as his throne.

See Is. 61:2. 2 K. 19:15. 1 S. 4:4. 2 S. 6:2. 1 Ch. 13:6. Ps. 80:1.

In like manner, 'the settling of the throne' signifies the settling or establishment of the government in peace; as in 2 S. 7:12, 13, 16, where throne and kingdom explain each other.

And the enlargement of the throne implies a great accession of dominion and power; as in 1 K. 1:37, compared with verse 47. And therefore Solomon, when he had subjugated all the nations round about him, so that they were obliged to bring him tribute, and had thus enlarged his dominions beyond what David had possessed before, made a new throne, a great throne of ivory, which symbolically represented his power, and the enlargement of his dominions, and the peace and prosperity of his reign.

A throne is, by all the oneroicritics, in ch. 225, explained of power. And by the Persian and Egyptian in ch. 201, a royal throne is explained of a king, or his seat.

In the magic oracles of Zoroaster, Avasth Spoush, the throne of necessity, signifies the power of fate or death.

Throne of God may signify a great, magnificent throne, according to a usual Hebraism, where nouns joined with the word God acquire a sense of excellency and greatness.

According to which, the throne of God may be a high and exalted throne, a royal or imperial seat, from whence the political world is ruled, as God from heaven rules the whole universe. See Is. 66:1. See also under CHAIR.

As thrones are seats of dignity, and are to distinguish those who have the administration of government committed to them, from the rest of the people who are to be governed by them, they can with no propriety be applied to every member of the kingdom. So in Re. 20:4, where it is said, 'I saw thrones, and I sat upon them,' the meaning, no doubt, is, that some sat on them, while others had no thrones appointed to them. The expressions seem to allude to the Sanhedrin, in which the members sat on raised seats or thrones, on each hand of the president. The same allusion may exist in Mat. 19:28.

Ps. 89:14, and Ps. 97:2, 'justice and judgment are the basis of his throne;' i. e. justice and equity are the foundation of all his proceedings.

THUNDER, in Ps. 29:3, is called the voice of God. This voice comes from heaven; and as heaven signifies the station of the supreme visible power, which is the political heaven, so the thunder is the voice and proclamation of that power, and of its will and laws, implying the obedience of the subjects, and at last overcoming all opposition.

So that, in this sense, thunder is the symbol of such oracles or laws as are enacted with terror, and so terribly men into a suitable obedience. And thus the law of Moses was uttered in with thunders and lightnings. Ex. 19:16. The oneirocritics had some notion of thunder signifying the publication of things. See Artem. b. 2, c. 8. 'Thunder discovers those that are hidden or desire to be hid.'

Thunder, considered as a motion or shaking, signifies a revolution in the state, or change of affairs; as in Hag. 2:6, 7, 21.

And from the terror which thunder occasions, it is frequently used in Scripture of God's discomfiting the enemies of his church; as in 18. 9:10. 7:16. Ps. 18:13; and in Is. 29:6, of his punishing the rebellious Jews.

Amongst the pagans all other portending symbols were stopped by that of the thunder, unless the thunder did confirm the former by being on the same side. Senec. Nat. Quest. b. 2, c. 34, and 41. They esteemed thunder the immediate voice of God, and therefore thought it presumption to consult about any thing when God spoke. His voice ought to impose silence on all, according to that eternal maxim of all government, that when the supreme authority speaks, the lesser courts cannot exert their power, and the presence of the supreme magistrate supercedes, for the time, the power of all the inferiors.

With the Egyptians, thunder was the symbol of a voice at great distance. Horap. Hierogl. 29. The seat of thunders and lightnings is the air.

Thunders and lightnings are sometimes mere accompaniments of the divine presence; but at other times they are symbols of great judgments on the earth. When they proceed from the throne of God, as in Re. 4:5, they are fit representations of God's glorious and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon earth, it expresses some judgment of God upon the world; as in Re. 8:5. 20:9. 16:19. Those mentioned in Re. 8:5, being previous to the sounding of the trumpets, may be understood as a general description of the many calamities of that period.

'A thunder storm and tempest,' says Lowman, p. 94, 'that throws down all before it, is a fit metaphor to express the calamities of war, from civil disturbances, or foreign invasion, which often, like a hurricane, lay all things waste, as far as they reach. It is thus Isaiah expresses the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, 36:2.

'Behold the mighty One, the exceedingly strong One,
Like a storm, like a destructive tempest,
Like a swift flood of mighty waters pouring down,
He shall dash them to the ground with his hand.'

See also Ez. 13:13.

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton, that 'in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens and clouds politic.'

The natural thunder is well described by Jb. 36:29, &c. and 37:1, &c. —

'You, verily, are understanding the expansions of the clouds,
And the thunder of his habitation.'

'At this also my heart trembleth,
And is moved out of its place.'

Hear attentively the concussion of his voice,
And the sound that goeth forth from his mouth:

He directeth it under the whole heaven,
And his lightning is to the end of the earth.

After it a voice roareth, He thundereth with his majestic voice,
And He will not restrain them (i. e. his bolts) when his voice is heard.

God thundereth marvelously with his voice;
He doth great things, which we cannot comprehend.'

TIME. According to Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 65, days, months, and years, are symbolical terms, and are not always to be understood literally, but are to be interpreted according to the circumstances of the case, and the age of the person or dreamer.

And so in the sacred writings, a day, in some places, is put for a year; as in Nu. 4:34. Ez. 4:4, 6.

This practice seems to have arisen, either from days and years being all one in the primitive state of the world, or else from the ignorance of men at first, in settling words to express the determined spaces of time. A day with them was a year; a month, a year; three months, a year; four months, or six months, a year, as well as the whole yearly revolution of the sun.

The Egyptians, from whom the symbolical language chiefly came, at first, gave the name of year to several spaces of time. See Smith, v. Ἡλιος, Ἡμεραι.

The day is a period and revolution, and so it is an εἰσάγωγος, a year. Plutarch and Diodorus say, that four months, or a season, were called a year. As for the annual revolution of the sun, it was called by them the year of the sun, or the year of God; Horap. Hierogl. b. 1. Hence a full year is called by Virgil a great year, Æn. b. 3, v. 284; and the year of Jupiter, by Homer, II. 2, v. 134.

Terms of time being thus ambiguous among the ancients, they must in the symbolical language be, by the rule of proportion, determined by the circumstances. Thus, if days were mentioned of a matter of great importance and duration, they must be explained by solar years, or full years. If years were spoken of a mean subject, as of the persons of men, and seemed to be above proportion, they must be explained of so many diurnal years, or common days. This is evidently the principle of Artemidorus, who finds mysteries in all numbers, and all expressions determining spaces of time.

Upon this also are grounded Joseph's expostulations of the dreams of the chief butler and baker. For otherwise three branches should rather signify three distinct *spring*s or solar years, as the seven ears of corn in Pharaoh's dream portend seven distinct crops, and by consequence seven solar years. But the subject-matter altered the property. Pharaoh's dream concerned the whole nation, the king being representative of the people. But the chief butler's dream concerned only his own person.

The way of the symbolical language in expressions determining the spaces of time, may be yet set in a plainer light from the manner of predictions, or the nature of prophetic visions. For a prophecy concerning future events is a picture or representation of the events in symbols, which, being brought from objects visible at one view or cast of the eye, rather represent the events in miniature, than in full proportion, giving us more to understand than what we see.

And, therefore, that the duration of the events may be represented in terms suitable to the symbols of the visions, the symbols of duration must be also drawn in miniature.

Thus, for instance, if a east empire, persecuting the church for 1260 years, was to be symbolically represented by a beast, the decorum of the symbol would require that the said time of its tyranny should not be expressed by 1260 years, because it would be monstrous and unnatural to represent a beast ravaging for so long a space of time, but by 1260 days.

And thus a day may imply a year, because that short revolution of the sun bears that same proportion to the yearly, as the type to the antitype.

In the chief butler's dream, the three branches signified three days; in that of the chief baker, the three baskets signified the same. In Pharaoh's dream, the seven fat and seven lean kine portended so many years of plenty and famine; as did also the seven good and seven bad ears of corn. So likewise in Nebuchadnezzar's image, the proportion and order of the members signifies the order of succession and time: the head begins, and signifies the Babylonian monarchy; and so on to the feet, Jews, and toes, signifying the last tyrannical powers exercising cruelty against the saints and church of God.

Thus, also, in the portentum exhibited to the Greeks in Antia, eight young birds with the mother, which is the ninth, being swallowed up by a dragon, who is after that turned into a stone, signifying that the Greeks should spend nine years in their wars against Troy, and that, in the tenth year, they should take the town. Homer, II. 2, v. 308.

Cicero objects against this interpretation, (de Divinat. b. 2.) and demands why the birds were rather to be interpreted of years, than of months or days. But the answer is obvious. Years only were proportionable to the event, and to the way of managing wars in those days. So that the rule of proportion is to be framed upon the circumstances.

There is such another portentum in Virgil, Æn. b. 8, v. 42, where thirty young pigs denote as many years.

And in Silius Italicus, there is an exurgens set down of a hawk pursuing and killing fifteen doves, and whilst he was stooping upon another, an eagle comes and forces the hawk away; which is there explained of Hannibal's wasting Italy during sixteen years, and his being driven away by Scipio.

In several places of Scripture, a day signifies an appointed time or season, as in Is. 34:8. 63:4; and so may imply a long time of many years, as, in He. 3:8, 9, 'the day of temptation in the wilderness,' is the time of forty years.

In the Latin authors, a day is used in signifying time in general, as in Tully, de Nat. Deor. b. 2,

'Opinionum enim commenta delet dies, naturæ judicia confirmat; and in Terence, 'dum adimere ægritudine hominibus.'

And days also may signify more especially the whole year, as it does in these verses of Lucretius, b. 1, v. 10,

'Nam simul se sperare pericula est verum Dei,
Et resonare riget gravi sine morbo Falax.'

In Tully, dies perperam signifies a short time, yet so as to contain 110 days.

Again, æstus is the season; thus, æstus hybernus, in Horace, is the winter; and in Virgil, formosissimus æstus is the spring.

And æreopis, a season, is sometimes used for a year, as in Da. 12:7; and so æreopis is put for a year in many places; as in Sophocles, in the Oriental oneirocritics, in Æliana, and Ammonius. And Ovid has used the word tempus to signify a year; Fast. b. 3, v. 163. Lastly, ωρα, hour, signifies time indefinitely, both in sacred and profane authors. In Aristophanes, ἡσος τε ωρα, in the spring time; in Theoclydes, ωρα εὐρος, the summer time.

And so hora is used in the Latin authors for time or season in general. See Vossius Etym.

TORCH, when considered in respect only of its burning, is a symbol of great anger and destruction. It is thus used by the prophet Zechariah, 12:6,

'In that day will I make the leaders of Judah
As a hearth of fire among wood,
And as a torch of fire in a sheaf;
And they shall devour, on the right hand and on the left,
All the people round about.'

So in Is. 7:4, Rezin king of Syria, and the king of Israel, two bitter enemies of Ahaz king of Judah, threatening war against Judah, are called 'two tails of smoking firebrands.'

Thus the dream of Hecuba when with child of Paris, how she brought forth a torch which burnt the city, was explained by Æneas the oneirocritic, that the child would prove to be the ruin of his country. And therefore Euripides calls this Paris by the name of δαδελ εἰσπερ πῖπρος, the bitter representative of a torch. And so Horace, speaking of Hannibal, compares him to torches set on fire, or a blasting wind, another symbol of war:

'Durus per arces Aloy ut Italiam,
Cum flamma per urbes, et cæcis
Per flammam equorum undas.'

A star burning like a torch may be a description of that sort of comets which, for the figure of them, are called lampades. And what is in Aristotle called καρπυρα, is in the author of the description of the Olympiads called λαγυρα; and as it is supposed to be mentioned in the Marble Chronicle at Oxford, it is there said to burn, καρπυρα.

Now, a comet was always thought to be a prodigy of bad omen; that in the times of Augustus only excepted by Pliny.

And streams of fire like torches, of which Livy gives some instances, were looked upon as ill omens. And Silius Italicus, describing the prodigies which foreboded the event of the battle at Cannæ, mentions such torches.

The ancient Grecian signals for beginning a battle were lighted torches, thrown from both armies by men called σπυροφωροι, or σπυροφωροι, who were priests of Mars, and therefore held inviolable, and who, having cast their torches, had safe retreats.

TOWER. Towers and fortresses are put, in the figurative language of prophecy, for defenders and protectors, whether by counsel or strength, in peace or in war. 2 S. 22:51, 'God is the tower of salvation for his king.'

Ps. 61:3,

'Thou hast been a shelter for me,
And a strong tower for the enemy.'

Pr. 18:10,

'The name of Jehovah is a strong tower;
The righteous runneth into it, and is safe.'

Is. 33:18, 'Where is he that numbered the towers?' that is, the commander of the enemy's forces, who surveyed the fortifications of the city, and took an account of the height, strength, and situation of the walls and towers, that he might know where to make the assault with the greatest advantage. See Lowth's note.

Towers are sometimes used to denote proud men, tyrants, and men in high station. Thus, in Is. 2:15. 30:25.

They were used, naturally enough, as asylæ, or places of safety. It is to this use of them the sacred writer alludes in Pr. 18:10, above quoted. Euripides, in Medea, v. 338, has an expression to this purpose — 'Remaining therefore a short time, if any tower of safety should appear to us.'

They were also used for the purpose of watching. See 2 K. 9:17, and 17:18. See also Is. 33:13.

TRAVAILING. Travailing (with child) is a symbol of great endeavors to bring something to pass, not without much difficulty, pain, and danger. And the compassing the end, which be persons represented by the symbol aimed at, is a deliverance from the pain and danger they labored under.

Hence the symbol of travelling with child is often used in the prophets to denote a state of anguish and misery; as in Is. 26:17, 18. 66:7. er. 4:31. 13:21. 30:6, 7.

And also in the New Testament, the pains of child-bearing are used to signify the sorrow of tribulation or persecution; as in Mat. 24:8. dk. 13:8. Jn. 16:21, 22. 1 Th. 5:3.

And Paul applies the expression to the propagation of the gospel through persecutions. sa. 4:19, 'My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you; i. e. for whom I am concerned and in fear, till the Christian doctrine has overcome in you the habits of sin. And in Ro. 8:22, he compares the earnest desire of the creation for the kingdom of Christ to the pains of a woman in travail.

The same metaphor is not unusual in pagan authors, and Cicero has it more than once. It is likewise understood by the Persian and Egyptian interpreters of afflictions and care, in h. 127.

On the other hand, the symbol of the birth tokens joy and deliverance; and especially of the child be a male, as in Jn. 16:21. And in s. 66:7, where the man-child is interpreted by the 'argument of a king, a deliverer.

TREAD. To tread under, or trample on, signifies to overcome and bring under subjection. Thus, in Ps. 60:12,

'Through God we shall vanquish,
For it is He that shall tread down our enemies.'

See also Is. 10:6. 14:25. Da. 7:23. Ps. 111:3. comp. with Lu. 10:19.

To tread upon snakes, in Homer, signifies to break or violate them. See Il. 4, v. 157, where the word aristoi is used.

In Re. 11:2, the outer court is said to be given to the Gentiles, that is, should become profane and common, and the 'holy city shall they read under foot forty and two months,' which Henry More thus explains: 'A kind of Pagan-Christianity, instead of pure Christianity, shall visibly domineer for forty and two months of years, that is, for 1260 years.'

The operation of treading the wine-press is well known, and from thence many emblematic expressions are borrowed, and employed in various parts of Scripture. See Ps. 58:11. s. 63:3, &c.

TREE. Trees were at first, in the primitive way of building, used for pillars; and agreeably to this, they denote in the symbolical language, according to their respective bulks and height, the several degrees of great or rich men, or the tobies of a kingdom; as in Zech. 11:1, 2.

Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedar,
Howl, O tree, for the cedar is fallen,
Because all the mighty are spoiled.
Howl, O ye oaks of Bashan,
For the forest of the vintage is come down;

where the words, 'all the mighty are spoiled,' show that the prophecy does not point at trees, but at men.

See, to the same purpose, Is. 2:13. 10:17, 18. 9:14. er. 22:23. Ec. 31:4. See Lowth's excellent note on Is. 2:13.

The onerocritics are very full in this particular, as the Persian and Egyptian in ch. 142, in all of them in ch. 151 and 165, where trees blown down with the wind, signify the destruction of great men.

Homer, who has many remnants and notions of the Eastern language, and whose comparisons are exactly just, very often compares his heroes to trees, as in b. 14. Hector, felled by a stone, is compared to an oak overturned by a thunderbolt. In b. 4, the fall of Simoisius is compared to that of a poplar; and in b. 17, hat of Euphorbus, to the fall of a beautiful live.

A tree exceeding great, may be the symbol of a king or monarchy, as in Da. 4. And as the vine, in the dream of Aytages, cited by Valerius Maximus, b. 1, c. 7.

Ez. 17:24, 'the high tree, and the green tree,' refer to Nebuchadnezzar; 'the low and the green tree,' to the Jews.

Tree of life, is a tree that gives fruit to eternal life, so that they who eat thereof continually shall never die. It is thus explained, Ge. 3:22, and is therefore a proper symbol to signify immortality.

From the happiness of eating of the tree of life in Paradise, any sort of true happiness or joy may come under the symbol of a tree of life; as in Pr. 15:4, 'A wholesome tongue is a tree of life,' meaning, a tongue that gives out advice, or pacifies great offences. And also in 11:30, 'Hope deferred maketh the heart sick; but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.'

TRUMPET. The trumpet sounding is, in Ex. 19:16-19, the forerunner of the appearance of God, and of the proclamation of the law.

Amongst the Jews, trumpets were used on several occasions:

1. To give notice, whilst they were in the wilderness, when the camp should remove. Nu. 10:2.

2. To call assemblies. Nu. 10:2.

3. To proclaim the return of the jubilee. Le. 25:8, 9.

4. To sound over the daily burnt-offering, and over the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, on the solemn days and new moons. 2 Ch. 29:27, 28. Ps. 81:3.

5. To give notice of the entrance and going out of the Sabbath.

6. To sound alarms in time of war; whence they signify, in the prophets, a denunciation of judgments, and a warning of the imminent approach of them; as in Jer. 4:19, 20, 21.

See also Jer. 42:14. 51:27. Am. 3:6. Zph. 1:16.

7. Trumpets sounded at the inauguration of the Jewish kings. 1 K. 1:34. 2 K. 9:13. 11:14.

8. When the city Jericho was to be taken, the trumpets were to sound, and a shout was to be raised. Jos. 6:16.

9. Trumpets were used at the laying of the foundation of the second temple. Esd. 3:10.

And it is highly probable that trumpets were used at the laying of the foundation of the first; for during the time of the building of it, music was continually used. Compare 1 Ch. 6:31, 32, with 16:7, and 25:1.

Amongst the heathens, trumpets were used, also, upon divers accounts:

1. The Romans made use of them to notify the watches in the night, and to give notice also of the time upon several other occasions.

2. They made use of them at the inauguration of their emperors.

3. The Roman magistrates caused the trumpets to sound at the execution of criminals, whom they looked upon as sacrifices, or persons devoted, as appears from Tacitus and Seneca.

4. Trumpets were used by the heathen in sounding alarms for war. Thus Homer makes the heaven to sound the trumpet when the gods went to war.

'Heaven in loud thunders bids the trumpet sound,
And wide beneath them groans the rending ground.'

And Plutarch, in the Life of Sylla, says that 'there were many omens of the war between Sylla and Marius; but that the greatest of all was, the sound of a trumpet in the air.'

5. Trumpets were used by the heathen at the destruction of cities. Thus, in Am. 2:2,

'I will send a fire upon Moab,
Which shall devour the palaces of Kirioth;
And Moab shall die with tumult,
With shouting, and the sound of the trumpet.'

And exactly in the same manner is the burning of Troy described by Virgil, Æn. 2, v. 313,

'New clamors and new clangors now arise,
The sound of trumpets mixed with fighting cries.'

Homer also makes mention of this custom in the following verses, Il. 18, v. 218,

'As the loud trumpet's brazen mouth from far,
With shrilling clangor, sounds the alarm of war,
Struck from the wall, the echoes float on high,
And the round bulwarks and thick towers reply;
So high his brazen voice the hero raised,
Hector drop the arms, and tremble as they heard.'

According to the same custom, the Romans demolished Corinth by sound of trumpet. These were a kind of religious acts.

And therefore Alexander the Great, concerning Persepolis, declared to his generals, that they ought to make a sacrifice to their ancestors, by its destruction.

And thus the inhabitants of Jericho were accursed or devoted, and as sacrifices slain. Jos. 6:17, 18, 21.

6. The foundations of cities were laid at the sound of musical instruments; in allusion to which, in Jb. 38:6, 7, it is said that 'when God laid the foundation of the earth, the stars and angels sang and shouted for joy,' which shows that such a custom had been used in the patriarchal times; to which also there is allusion in Zech. 4:7.

The trumpet was used to proclaim danger. Thus, Jo. 2:1,

'Blow ye the trumpet in Zion,
And sound an alarm in my holy mountain,'

as a signal for the immediate approach of the locusts, and to excite the hearts of the people to repentance.

Am. 3:6,
'Shall a trumpet be blown in a city,
And the people not be afraid?'

i. e. as the people run together through fear, when the signal of an approaching enemy is made, so let my warning strike the Israelites with terror.

Re. 4:1, 'I heard as it were a trumpet talking with me.' This may probably allude (says Lowman) to the custom of the Jewish church, that upon opening of the gates of the temple, the priests rounded their trumpets, to call the Levites and stationary men to their attendance.'

There was an instituted festival among the Jews, called the feast of trumpets, celebrated in the beginning of the civil year, in the month Tisri, answering to our September. The day was kept solemn, all servile business was suspended, and particular sacrifices were offered. Le. 23:24, 25. The new moons, or first days of every month, were celebrated also by the sound of trumpets, Nu. 10:10; and by extraordinary sacrifices, &c. Ps. 81:3.

TWELVE, a sacred number, symbolical of just proportion, beauty, stability, and the like.

Thus, Ex. 24:4, twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes; Ex. 28:21, twelve precious stones; Le. 24:5, twelve cakes; Nu. 7:3, twelve oxen; Nu. 7:84, twelve chargers, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons; Nu. 7:87, twelve bullocks, twelve rams, twelve lambs; Nu. 17:2, twelve rods; Jos. 4:3, twelve stones out of Jordan, 1 K. 7:25, the sea stood on twelve oxen; 1 K. 9:20, twelve lions.

All these twelves, no doubt, had a reference to the number of the tribes.

1 K. 11:30, Jeroboam's garment was rent in twelve pieces; 1 K. 18:31, Elijah took twelve stones, and built an altar; 1 K. 19:19, Elisha ploughed with twelve yoke of oxen; and so in many other places, where the number twelve occurs.

Jb. 38:32, 'Canst thou bring forth the twelve signs?' Ez. 43:16, the altar shall be twelve cubits long and twelve broad. Mat. 10:2, twelve apostles; Mat. 14:20, of the fragments twelve baskets; Mat. 26:53, twelve legions of angels; Lu. 2:42, when Jesus was twelve years old; Jn. 11:9, where there are twelve hours in the day? Ac. 7:8, and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs; Re. 12:1, on his head a crown of twelve stars; Re. 21:12, the city had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels; Re. 21:14, the wall of the city had twelve foundations; Re. 22:2, the tree of life bare twelve manner of fruits.

And we find the mystical number twelve multiplied into itself in Re. 21:17, 144 cubits, according to the measure of a man, as measured by the angel.

The note of Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, on Re. 7:4, is worth transcribing. 'This single passage,' says he, 'may show the mistake of those who always expect the numbers in the Revelation to be precise and exact; for is it to be supposed, that there should be in each tribe 12,000 elect, neither more nor less, to make up the total sum of 144,000? It is not by such trifles, and low sense, the divine oracles are to be explained. We are to observe, in the numbers of the Revelation, a certain figurative proportion, which the Holy Ghost designs to point out to observation. As there were twelve patriarchs and twelve apostles, twelve becomes a sacred number in the synagogue, and in the Christian church. This number of twelve, first multiplied into itself, and then by a thousand, makes 144,000. The bishop observes, in the solid proportion of this square number, the unchangeableness of the truth of God and his promises; perhaps it may mean the beauty and stability of the Christian church keeping to the apostolic purity of faith and worship.' Lowman, p. 84.

TWO. A symbolical number. The two olive-trees. Zech. 4:3. See OLIVE-TREE.

The two witnesses. Re. 11:4.

'Two,' says Dr. Henry More, 'though never so many, partly by reason of the types in the Old Testament to which they allude, viz. Moes and Aaron, Elijah and Elisha, Zerubbabel and Joshua, who showed their zeal for the purity of God's worship against the idolatry in the wilderness, in the Baalish idolatry, and in the captivity of Babylon.'

'There may also be an allusion to things in this division into two, viz. to magistracy and ministry, to the Old Testament and the New, to the people of the Jews, and to the virgin company of Christians.'

The two tables of testimony. Ex. 31:18. Two disciples sent forth at a time. Mk. 6:7. Two women who had wings. Zech. 5:9.

Two immutable things, the promise and the oath of God. He. 6:18.

It is sometimes used to denote very few. Thus, in 1 K. 17:12, 'I am gathering two sticks;' i. e. a few. So in Is. 7:21, 'two sheep;' i. e. a small flock.

In Persius, 'Vel duo vel nemo'—two or none—next to none. And the like in Homer, Il. 2, v. 346.

V.

VAIL. A covering worn by females in token of modesty and subjection.

It was also used as an ornamental part of dress, richly embroidered and transparent, in very early ages. Homer describes, in his Iliad, a beautiful one offered by the Trojan matrons at the altar of Minerva. And Penelope's is thus described in Pope's Odyssey,

'A veil translucent, o'er her brow displayed,
Her beauty seems, and only seems, to shade.'

Ceres is said to have worn a black veil by the Grecian poets, either as a sign of sorrow for the loss of Proserpine, or to conceal her grief from observation.

We find Rebekah makes use of one, on being informed that Isaac was approaching to meet her. Ge. 24:65.

When Judah meets Tamar, she is described as covering herself with a veil. 'This phrase is rather remarkable, as Judah, on that account possibly, supposed her to be a courtesan. Ge. 38:14. And it is said that slaves formerly in Greece wore larger veils than other people.

Euripides makes Andromache complain, in his play of that name, 'I was conducted from my husband's bed to the strand, my face covered with the veil of a captive.' It is well known that the veils of female slaves in the Levant, at present, cover the whole body, and that the Greeks have more tenacious of their old customs than most other nations.

That the Jewish ladies, in Isaiah's time, wore veils, is plain from Is. 3:19.

Virgil describes Helen as veiled, Æn. 1, v. 654,

'Et circumtextum cervice velamen acantho,
Ornatus Argivæ Hecubæ.'

The veil, as a mark of subjection, seems to be referred to by the apostle, in 1 Co. 11:10, where women are required to have on their head hæretic, i. e. καλνυμα, a veil, to show that they are subject to their husbands, who exercise dominion, or power, over them. And to this may be referred Ge. 20:16, where the veil of Sarah is adverted to.

Euripides, speaking of Hecuba, says, Hecub. v. 445, 'she lies wrapped in veils,' which he explains, v. 435, by 'she lies like a servant, or subject, on the earth.'

'The veil was worn by suppliants and unhappy persons of either sex; see 2 S. 15:30, 19:4, Est. 6:12, Jer. 14:3, 4, to which may be referred Mk. 14:72, where the term καλνυμα is applied to Peter as a penitent. See Parkhurst on the term.

The veil is employed as the symbol of ignorance. Thus, Is. 25:7,

'And on this mountain shall He destroy
The covering that covered the face of all people,
And the veil that was spread over all nations.'

See also 2 Co. 3:14, &c., where Paul alludes to the veil of Moses, and says, when the Jews shall attend to and receive the doctrine of Christ, the veil that is over their hearts, in the reading of the Old Testament, shall be taken away. See Origen against Celsus, b. 5, p. 271.

VALLEY, though for most part used literally, is sometimes to be met with in a figurative and symbolical sense, as in Is. 22:1, 'The oracle concerning the valley of vision.' Jerusalem is here called by that name symbolically, because, as Jerome observes, this city was the seminary or school of the prophets, in which the temple was built, and the visions of God were multiplied, where He manifested Himself visibly in the holy place.

Ps. 23:4,
'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me;

i. e. though I encounter the most luminous peril of death itself. The psalm speaks of God as a shepherd, and the metaphor is taken from sheep, which, wandering in search of pasture, and having strayed into shady valleys, become liable to the dangers arising from the incursion of wild beasts that make their haunt there. See Ps. 119:176.

Ps. 64:7, 'who, passing through the valley of Baca, make it a well.'

Baca means a large shrub, or tree, which the Arabs still call by that name, probably so called from its distilling an odoriferous gum; from bac, to weep or ooze out. It appears, according to Celsus (quoted by Parkhurst), to have been a rugged valley, embarrassed with bushes and stones, which could not be passed through without labor and tears, such as we may collect from De 21:4, where to be found in Judea. And, as Parkhurst adds, 'A valley of this kind was a striking emblem of that vale of thorns and tears through which all believers must pass to the heavenly Jerusalem.' The Septuagint, Aquila, and the Vulgate, all translate the word baca by weeping or tears. But see a valuable note in Horne's Introd. vol. iii. p. 42, Ed. 2.
Ho. 2:15,

'And from thence will I give her her vineyards,
And the valley of Achor for a door of hope.'

It was in this valley, immediately after the execution of Achan, that God said to Joshua, Jos. 8:1, 'Fear not, neither be thou dismayed,' and promised to support him against Ai, her king, and her people. And from this time, Joshua drove on his conquests with uninterrupted success. In like manner, the tribulations of the Jews, in their present dispersion, shall open to them the door of hope, and there, i. e. in the wilderness and in the vale of tribulation, under those circumstances of present difficulty, mixed with cheering hope. See Horsley in loc.

Valley of Hinnom or Gehenna. 2 Ch. 28:3, Jer. 7:32, Is. 30:33, and other places.

Gehenna, or Tophet, or the Valley of Hinnom, was a place near Jerusalem, of which we hear first in Jos. 15:8. It was there that the cruel sacrifices of children were made by the king to Moloch, the Ammonitish idol. The place was also called Tophet, and that, as is supposed, from the noise of drums (tuph signifying a drum), a noise raised on purpose to drown the cries of the helpless infants. As this place was, in process of time, considered as an emblem of hell, or the place of torment reserved for the punishment of the wicked in a future state, the name Tophet came gradually to be used in this sense, and at length to be confined to it. The term Gehenna, which corresponds to Tophet, occurs twelve times in the New Testament.

In Is. 30:33, the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed is called Tophet, by a metonymy; for that army was destroyed probably at a greater distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it. See Lowth in loc.

Jeremiah, 31:40, calls it the 'valley of dead bodies and of ashes,' from its having been made a common burying place, and a receptacle for the rubbish and filth of the city. The valley of Hinnom lay to the west of the city, winding to the south.

Zch. 12:11,
'In that day the mourning shall be great in Jerusalem.
As the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo.'

Jerome says this was a place near Jezreel. De Lisle places it near Megiddo, where Josiah was slain, over whom great lamentation was made. 2 Ch. 35:22-25.

This mourning of the Jews, Newcome thinks, will take place on the reappearance of their Messiah from heaven, Re. 1:7, 20:4, when the restored descendants of those Jews who slew Him shall be touched with the deepest compunction for the guilt of their forefathers.

Jo. 3:2, 'the valley of Jehoshaphat.'

As the term Jehoshaphat signifies in Hebrew 'the judgment of God,' it is very probable that the valley here mentioned is a symbolical, and means the valley of the divine judgment, wherever that might be. For it is said, 'I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and I will plead with them there.' In this sense the Chaldee paraphrase understands it, and renders it 'the valley of the division of judgment.' And Theodotion, 'into the place of judgment;' and in verse 14, it is called 'the valley of decision.' From these passages, the Jews and some Christians have been of opinion, that the last judgment will be solemnized in the valley of Jehoshaphat. If we understand the words in this sense, the valley of Jehoshaphat will denote no particular place in the country of Judea, but only some place where God would execute his vengeance on the enemies of the Jews, which, as Grotius on the place remarks, may be called a valley, from the manner of human judgments—the judges sitting in a more exalted place, and the criminals standing in a lower.

VESSEL. Used to represent the human body or person. 1 Th. 4:4, 1 S. 21:5. Cicero has a similar phrase—'Corpus quidem quasi vas est aut aliquid animi receptaculum.' See also Lucret. b. 3, v. 441, and v. 553.

Earthen vessels, or vessels of shell, 2 Co. 4:7, the ministers of the gospel.

The weaker vessel, 1 Pe. 3:7, the wife, as compared with her husband.

Vessels of wrath, or of mercy, Ro. 9:22, 23, such nations or communities as are objects of God's favor or displeasure, in allusion to the comparison of the potter, verse 21.

A chosen vessel unto Me, Ac. 9:15, i. e. a most choice instrument. Neither, says Grotius, did Polybius, speaking of Democles, use the word ovcus, a vessel, in another sense; for this man was a most profitable vessel for service, and most fit for business. Compare 2 Ti. 2:20, 21.

VINE AND VINEYARD. A well-known emblem of the church of God, whether under the old or new dispensation. See a beautiful allegory under this image in Ps. 80:15, &c.; in Is. 5:1, where, at verse 7, it is said, 'The vineyard of Jehovah is the house of Israel.' And the same image is frequently employed by our Lord; as in Mat. 20:1, 21:28, Lu. 13:6. See also Jn. 15:1, Jer. 2:21, Ez. 19:10, Ho. 10:1.

Vineyards were usually the scenes of joy, especially at the time of vintage. Hence, when God threatens by Amos, Am. 5:17, 'And in all vineyards shall be wailing,' it was reversing the customary merriment, and a mark of indignation.

VIRGIN. This term is often used to denote a people, city, or nation. Thus, Is. 47:1, 'Come down and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon!' Jer. 14:17, 31:4, 21, 46:11, La. 2:13, Am. 5:2.

It is sometimes used as the symbol of purity. 2 Co. 11:2, 'that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.'

It is also employed to represent freedom from idolatrous defilement and corruption; as in Re. 14:4, 'These are they who are not defiled with women, for they are virgins.'

VOICE. The voice of a person, according to the Indian Interpreter, ch. 50, denotes his name and reputation among the people.

A voice to a person from behind, when the word behind is not used to denote symbolically a thing future, signifies, that the person to whom it is directed is gone out of the way, and requires to be recalled, which implies repentance. Thus, in Is. 30:21,

'And thine ears shall hear a voice whispering thee behind,
Saying, This is the way, walk ye in it:
Turn not aside to the right or to the left.'

Agreeably to this, a voice to a person from behind, in order to direct him to behold a vision behind him, will denote that the vision relates to something past or existent, and to be observed as well backwards towards the time past, as forwards towards that which is to come.

In Ge. 4:10, the voice of Abel's blood is said to cry unto God; a very singular expression, importing that God is the spectator and avenger of all murderous transactions.—According to the dying words of Zerchariah, 'when slain by Joash, 2 Ch. 24:22, 'The Lord look upon it, and require it.' There being no successor to Ahab to avenge his death, God takes up his cause and punishes the fratricide. Thus, as Paul remarks, 'whether we live, we live by the Lord, and whether we die, we die by the Lord; living and dying we are the Lord's.' Ro. 14:8.

Thunder is repeatedly called the voice of God. Thus, Jb. 37:2,

'Hear attentively his voice with trembling;
Hear attentively the concussion of his voice;
He directeth it under the whole heavens,
And his lightning to the ends of the earth.
After it a voice roareth:
God thundereth with his majestic voice:
He will not restrain (his thunderbolt) when his voice is heard.
God thundereth with his majestic voice:
He doeth great things, which we cannot comprehend.'

W.

WALL is the strength of a city, and therefore the symbol of security. Ser. Is. 26:1, 'Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.'
Zch. 2:5,

'I will be a wall of fire round about her,
And the glory in the midst of her.'

This sublime image, a wall of fire, strongly expresses the divine protection, and must have reminded the Jews of the pillar of fire, by which God directed and defended their ancestors.

The 'glory in the midst' is, no doubt, an allusion to the symbol of the divine presence in the holy of holies. Ro. 9:4.

A high wall denotes a still greater degree of stability and safety. See Pr. 18:11.

A wall of brass is used by Horace, Ep. 1, b. 1, v. 60, as a symbol of the greatest strength and defence.

The wall of the New Jerusalem, Re. 21:2, &c., is evidently intended to express the security of the inhabitants in that happy state; and the angel at each gate, as a sentinel or guard, expresses the same thing, with the addition of the honor arising from such guardianship.

In Pr. 25:28, the man who has no command over his own temper, is compared to a city that is broken down and without walls. He lives exposed to all the consequences of his own turbulent passions.

Claudius has, 'non dabitis munus sceleris,' i. e. you shall give no harbor or security to crime.

The servants of Nabul speak of David's followers as having been a wall to them both night and day; i. e. were a guard or security. 1 S. 25:16. So Ajax is called by Homer the wall or bulwark of the Grecian band. Il. 7.

That is a beautiful expression made use of by Isaiah, 26:1,

'In that day shall this song be sung:
In the land of Judah we have a strong city,
Salvation shall He establish for walls and bulwarks.'

Sometimes a wall denotes separation. Thus the ceremonial law given to the Jews is called a 'middle wall of partition.' Ep. 2:14.

Walls used to be dedicated with particular ceremonies, see Ne. 12:27, and were thence called sacred.

In idolatrous countries, they were used as a place of sacrifice. The king of Moab offered his eldest son upon the wall. See 2 K. 3:27. POMPONIUS mentions the sacredness of walls in lib. 11, § 10 — 'Sanctas res quoque, veluti muri et portæ civitatibus quodammodo juris divini sunt, et ideo nullius in bonis sunt, ideo autem muros sanctos dicimus, quia pœna capitis constituta est in eos, qui aliquid in muros deliquerint.' Whence the law of Romulus, 'No Julia nisi per portam urbem ingreditur, monia sacrosancta sunt' — Let no one enter the city across by the gate; let the walls be sacred.

WATCHMEN. By watchmen are meant the prophets of God. See Ez. 3:17, and 33:2,9, s. 58:1. They gave notice of God's dispensations, and called upon men to act suitably under them. The true watchman or faithful prophet is distinguished from the temporizer and sealer.

In Jer. 6:17, God declares his intention of ending watchmen to give timely warning to his people, and at the same time exhorts them to pay due attention to the warning so given them by sound of trumpet, as the manner of watchmen was in making public proclamation of the enemy's approach.

Lowth considers the term watchmen to be borrowed from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch, day and night, by the Levites. The watches in the East, even to this day, are performed by a loud cry from time to time, to mark the hour, and to show that they themselves are attentive to their duty.

Hence the watchmen are said by Isaiah, 28:8, to lift up their voice, and in 62:6, not to keep silence, and the greatest reproach to them is, that they are dumb dogs — they cannot bark. 'I screamers' — sluggards — loving to slumber, 56:10. And he cites the 134th Psalm as an example of the temple watch, which was the alternate cry of two different divisions of watchmen. By this, light is thrown on an obscure passage in Ma. 2:12 —

Jehovah will cut off the man that doth this:
The watchmen and the dreamer, from the tents of Jacob,
And him that presenteth an offering to Jehovah, God of hosts.

Rabbi Eliezer says, there are three watches in the night, and in each watch sits the holy and blessed God, and roars like a lion; as R. is said, Jehovah roars from on high, and utters its voice from his habitation.

In the room of the prophets of the Old Testament are the ministers of the New, who are the watchmen of the Christian church, and watch for their souls, as they that must give account.' And to whom it is said, 'Take heed to the flock over which the Holy Spirit hath made you watchmen (overseers).' Hence to the angel of the church of Sardis, it is written, Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die. If thou wilt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.'

WATER. Water is so necessary to life, that the onirocritics make it, when clear, cold, and pleasant, the symbol of great good.

Thus, according to the Indian, in ch. 38, 'to dream of quenching one's thirst with pure water,' denotes a greater joy than can be procured by any worldly affluence. And in ch. 57, it is said, 'If a king dreams that he makes an aqueduct for his people of pure water, and they, being thirsty, drink of it, it signifies that he will relieve, set at liberty, and make joyful the oppressed.'

And, on the other hand, in ch. 182, muddy waters denote diseases and afflictions. Hence the torments of wicked men, after this life, were by the ancients represented under the symbol of a lake, whose waters were full of mud and dung. Virgil, Æn. b. 6, v. 295; Digen. Laert. b. 6, § 33; Plutarch de Audiend.; Æt. p. 19.

Many waters, on account of their noise, number, and disorder, and confusion of their waves, are the symbol of peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues.

The symbol is so explained in Re. 17:15; and Jer. 47:2, waters signify an army or multitude of men.

The comparison of the noise of a multitude to the noise of many or mighty waters, is used by Isaiah, in 17:12,13, much after the same manner as Homer compares the noise of a multitude to the noise of the waves of the sea in a storm, Iliad. b. v. 394. The passage in Isaiah is as follows:

Woe to the multitude of the numerous peoples,
Who make a sound like the sound of the sea;
And to the multitude of the nations,
Who make a roaring like the roaring of mighty waters.
Like the roaring of mighty waters do the nations roar,
But he shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far away,
And they shall be driven like the chaff of the hills before the wind,
And like the summer before the whirlwind.

The parallel in Homer is far inferior in grandeur:

'The monarch spoke; and straight a murmur rose,
Lead as the surges when the tempest blows;
That, dashed on broken rocks, tumultuous roar,
And foam and thunder on the stony shore.'

WELL. A pit sunk below the surface of the earth, signifies any obscure place, whence it is difficult to draw forth any thing.

In Eastern countries, the prisons for slaves were made like pits or dens under ground, and their graves were sometimes formed in a similar manner, as the Egyptians and Phrygians did.

Hence it comes that graves were compared to prisons, and prisons to graves. And in Is. 24:22, the pit there mentioned is explained of a prison.

And so a prison is called puteus, a pit, in Plantus, Aulul. act. 2, scene 5,

'Vincite, verberate, in puteum condite.'

So that a well or pit without water, singly considered, may, as the case requires, signify either the grave or a prison.

WHORE. The Hebrew term for whore signifies not only a lewd woman, but an innkeeper and trading woman, from zōan to feed or entertain strangers. And because such women were addicted to prostitution, the word came to signify a bawd or whore. Thus the harlot Rahab is in the Samaritan Chronicle a hottess; and by the same word are Jerusalem and Samaria described in the Targum on Ez. 23:44, where the prophet describes them at the same time as whores and hottesses, entertaining all the idolatrous strangers. Παδόχοιον, an inn, signifies also a brothel in the verses of Philopides, cited by Plutarch. By this we may guess why it was so shameful to be seen in a victualling-house, as we find it was by some passages in ancient authors, because such places were brothels. Hence the reproach in Jer. 5:7, they lodge in the harlots' houses. Though Blayney makes it to signify the idol's temple, as adultery means idolatry.

From this notion of a whore being a trader and entertainer of strangers, the city of Tyre, which was the finest mart in the world at that time, is, by the prophet Isaiah, called a harlot, in 23:16, and so likewise Nineveh, in Na. 3:4. Whoring and trading are therefore synonymous, and to this purpose, see Is. 23:17.

As uncleanness of all kinds was the frequent adjunct of idolatry, amongst the Babylonians, Grecians, and others, as mentioned by Herodotus and Strabo, so it appears to have been among the Canaanites and Midianites; and hence fornication, whoredom, and adultery, came to be used to denote, in general, idolatrous worship and practices.

On these accounts, a harlot or whore is the symbol of a church, city, or nation, that is guilty of idolatry, unchristian, or irreligious practices, and that procures to herself by the pains thereof great riches and power. See Re. 17:1,5; and see Lowman on the passage.

WINDS. Winds, as the cause of storms, are a proper symbol of wars and great commotions. The raging of the winds and waves, and the madness of the people, have long been considered as analogous.

They are unanimously so explained by the Oriental interpreters. And with Artemidorus, stormy winds denote great dangers and troubles.

The metaphor taken from winds, to denote wars, is common in all authors. See Horace, b. 1, Ode 14, with the commentators.

The use which the prophets make of the symbol is to the same effect, to denote incursions of enemies and the like.

Thus, in Da. 7:2,3, the prophet has a vision of the four monarchies, which were to arise from the wars and tumults of men, expressed by the symbol of 'four winds striving upon the great sea.' The vicinity of the several kingdoms to the great sea, or Mediterranean, so called by way of distinction from the lesser seas or lakes in Judea, may serve to illustrate further, as Winitz observes, the propriety of the prophet's analogy. From the various tumults and commotions with which the countries around that sea were agitated, the four large monarchies or empires emerged or came up; and their various ravages, idolatry, and tyranny, sufficiently justify the allusion to wild beasts.

Virgil, Æn. 1, 80, has a similar passage, only there the winds are literally meant:

'Una Euræque Notæque ruunt, creberque procellos Africaus.'

In Jer. 49:36,37, the symbol is both used and explained:

'I will bring against Elam four winds
From the four extremities of the heavens,' &c.;

i. e. enemies directing their force against them from every quarter of the heavens.

So, in Jer. 51:1, a destroying wind is a destructive war.

Wind is sometimes applied metaphorically to doctrine. Ep. 4:14. He. 13:9. Ja. 1:6.

It is also used as the emblem of the Holy Spirit. Act. 2:2. Jn. 3:8.

It is occasionally employed as an emblem of the uncertainty of human life and its fluctuating concerns. Thus in Jb. 6:26, 7:7. Ps. 78:39. Ec. 5:15. Jer. 5:13. Ho. 8:7, &c.

Re. 7:1, to hold the winds that they should not blow, is a very proper prophetic emblem of a state of peace and tranquillity.

WINE. The Egyptian interpreter says, 'Sharp, sour wine denotes bitterness and affliction.'

The Nazarites were particularly commanded to abstain from wine. See Am. 2:11,12.

Wine is used as the symbol of spiritual blessings. See Is. 25:6 —

'And Jehovah, God of hosts, shall make
For all people, in this mountain,
A feast of delicacies, a feast of old wines,
Of delicacies exquisitely rich, of old wines perfectly refined.'

See also Pr. 9:5. Is. 55:1.

Wine is also the symbol of the divine judgments. Ps. 60:3.

'Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.'

This may be considered as equivalent to the cup of fury and trembling. Is. 51:17. Zch. 12:2. For it is usual to denote the dispensations of Providence, favorable or adverse, by some similar metaphor. See Ps. 36:8. Jb. 21:20. Is. 39:20. Jer. 23:15. 25:15. Mat. 20:22,23. Jn. 18:11. Re. 14:10.

See also Is. 5:8.

God reproaches the Jews by Isaiah, 1:22 —

'Thy silver is become dross;
Thy wine is mixed with water;'

an image to express adulteration. See Lowth's note on the passage. A metaphor which Paul seems to use, 2 Co. 2:17, where he says, 'We are not like many who adulterate the word of God; i. e. with human inventions or imaginations.'

Wine, from its intoxicating effects, is used to denote communion in the idolatries of the mystic Babylon. Re. 14:8. Comp. Jer. 51:7. Lees, or dregs of wine, figuratively signify divine judgments. Ps. 75:8. Is. 51:17, &c.

In Jer. 48:11, it denotes permanence in one situation:

'Moab hath settled upon his lees.'

By this allegory, Moab is represented as having enjoyed singular advantages from having constantly remained in his own country ever since he became a people.

Ho. 3:1, 'and love flagons of wine;' i. e. to drink wine in the temples of their idols. Am. 2:8. Jud. 9:27.

WINE-PRESS, among the Israelites, was like a threshing-floor; and therefore we read that Gideon was threshing in one of them, Jud. 6:11. The Septuagint has it, ῥαδοῖζον σῖτον ἐν ληνῷ.

The form of it seems to have been this: suppose a bank of earth raised in a convenient circumference, or else a floor sunk below the surface of the ground about it, that the grapes and juice may be kept in: then on one side a pit was sunk much lower than the floor, to place the vats to receive the new-pressed juice falling into them. This floor was the wine-press. Hence we may easily understand why our Savior expresses the making of a wine-press by digging; as also Isaiah in ch. 5.

The meaning of the symbol is very easy. The Indian Onirocritic, in ch. 193, explains it of great conquest, and, by consequence, much slaughter. It is so used in Is. 63:3 —

'I have trodden the wine-press alone,

'And of the people there was none with me.

And I trod them in mine anger,

And I trampled them in mine indignation,

And their life-blood was sprinkled upon my garments,

And I have stained all mine apparel.'

And in La. 1:15, the destruction of Judah is represented under this type:

'Jehovah hath trodden down all my valiant ones in the midst of me;

He hath called an assembly against me, to crush my young men;

Jehovah hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah,

as he a wine-press.

And the symbol is extremely proper. The pressure of the grapes till their blood comes out, as their juice is called in De. 32:14, aptly representing great pressure, or affliction, and effusion of blood.

Re. 14:19, 'The great wine-press of the wrath of God.'

To tread a wine-press, as before remarked, is a prophetic description of destruction. The images in this vision are very strong and expressive. The largest wine-presses were used to be in some places out of the city. So in v. 20, 'The wine-press was trodden without the city,' and seems to intimate the great numbers that shall be involved in this general destruction. This judgment seems still to be future. No past period or event appears exactly applicable to it. It must be therefore left to time more fully to explain it.

The wine-press is sometimes the symbol of abundance of good. Thus, Pr. 3:10, 'Thy presses shall burst out with new wine.'

WING. Wings are the symbol of defence and protection, and are taken from the action of the parent bird, when her young are in danger. Hence Jesus says of Jerusalem, Mat. 23:37, 'How often would I have gathered thee, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings!' And the Psalmist says, Ps. 36:7, 'The sons of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings.' And Boaz thus addresses Ruth, Ru. 2:12, 'Under whose wings (i. e. God's) thou art come to trust.'

That the term wing is sometimes used in an adverse sense, is true. See Jer. 48:40, and 49:22; and compare De. 28:49.

That it has many other metaphorical meanings, such as,

The ranks of an army, and the arrangement of its battalions. Is. 8:8.

The extremities of the earth, and remote regions. Job. 37:3. 38:13. Is. 11:12. 94:16. Ez. 7:2, &c.

The extremity, hem, fringe, or tuft of a garment. Nu. 15:36. Ru. 3:9. 1 S. 24:5. Jer. 2:34. Hag. 2:12. Zech. 8:23, &c.

The beam of the sun, Mat. 4:2. An opposite mode of speaking is found in Virgil, Æn. b. 8,

'Night comes on, and covers the earth with its dusky wings.'

The wings of the wind; i. e. its swift and impetuous motion. 2 S. 22:11. Ps. 104:3.

That it has these various meanings; in short, that it signifies any thing that protects, as the wing of a bird from its body, is plain, from numerous passages of Scripture. Still the symbolical meaning above assigned to it, as its most general figurative application, is correct. See Ps. 17:8. Ps. 91:4, &c.

Jolais, in Euripides, quoted by Lancaster, to express that the children of Hercules were under his protection after their father's death, says, 'they were under his wings.' And Megara, speaking of the same children, says, 'she preserved them under her wings, as a hen her young ones.' Hercules Furis, v. 71.

The Hebrew term for wing, canep, signifies a covering, and, as a covering is protection, so the wing is a proper symbol of the same, just as a tabernacle is a covering in hot countries, and is therefore a symbol of protection. So the fortress in Babylon was called wrepa, wings, from the protection it pretended to afford. On account of wings being the symbol of protection, some of the Egyptians called their god, whom they looked upon as everlasting and immortal, Cnep, that is, the wing, or Cnephis, as Strabo writes it, with the Greek termination. And they also represented him with a wing upon his head, as the symbol of his royalty; the chief notion of the deity and of kings being that of protectors. And therefore the true God is, on this account, styled, in 1 Th. 4:10, 'the protector of all men, but especially of those that believe.' See Dausby.

Another use of wings is to carry away or help in flight; and in this case also, wings are the symbols of protection. Thus, in Ex. 19:4, God says to the Israelites, after he had delivered them from Pharaoh, and caused them to pass safely into the wilderness, 'Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you to myself.' The same image is beautifully expanded in De. 32:11, 12—

'As an eagle stretch up her nest,
Fluttereth above her young;
Spreading abroad her wings,
Tareth them, beareth them on her wings;
So Jehovah alone did lead him,
And there was no strange god with him.'

Wings, when used to fly upwards, are the symbols of exaltation. Thus, Is. 40:31, 'They shall mount up with wings as eagles;' i. e. they shall be highly exalted.

Ps. 139:9,

'Should I lift up my wings to the dawn,
Or dwell in the utmost extremity of the sea.'

By the dawn, meaning the East; by the sea, the West; in other words, Should I take my flight eastward or westward, the result would be the same. And, as Merrick observes, there is no more impropriety in attributing to a man wings, than horns.

The passage in Is. 18:1,

'Ho! thou land shadowed with wings!' has always been considered an obscure one. Lowth translates it,

'Ho to the land of the winged symbol!' and defends his interpretation in a note. But Vitrings's mode of explaining it, as quoted by Parkhurst, seems preferable; he explains the wings here mentioned of the chains of mountains, which, it is well known, border and bound on each side the long valley of the Nile, so that Egypt is overshadowed or protected, both from the rays of the sun, and from invasion, on the west towards Lybia, and on the east towards Arabia; and which chains of mountains, in running from the south towards the north, diverge on each side to a greater distance, like two wings. See Shaw, Pococke, Egmont, and Hayman's Travels.

Junius and Tremellius give nearly the same idea, understanding, by wings, the coasts or shores of the country, which are enclosed with high and shady mountains, such as Strabo affirms to be in the neighborhood of the Red Sea.

While Glassius interprets wings in the above passage, as meaning the 'sails of ships,' which are their extreme parts, and are spread out in the shape of wings, and are the instruments of swift motion over the waters, when blown by winds. They also afford shade to sailors. So in Virgil, Æn. 3. 530, 'Velorum pandimus alas'—We spread forth the wings of our sails.

Da. 9:27, 'the desolating wing of detestation'—by which phrase is to be understood the Roman army and its legions, who were detestable on account of their idolatry. Compare Mat. 24:15, with Lu. 21:30.

There is another reason why Daniel may use the term 'wing' here, as well as why he assigns the wings of a bird or fowl to two of the four mystical beasts, which, in his vision, represented the four great monarchies. For by this picture the desolation, which these monarchies were to bring on other nations, and the spread and force with which they would act, were strongly and beautifully represented to those who understood symbolical writing.

The stretching out of wings signifying action or design, the names of these symbols were naturally used for the things signified by them. Hence Isaiah, predicting the invasion of Judea by the king of Assyria, has used that expression; 8:8,

'And the extension of his wings shall be
Over the hill breadth of thy land, O Immanuel!'

By the like metaphor, Jeremiah predicted the desolation of Moab, 48:40,

'Behold, like an eagle shall he fly,
And shall spread forth his wings over Moab.'

Maimonides, in his More Nev. p. 1, c. 49, says, 'Observe that all things, which are moved by a very rapid motion, are, on account of their celerity, said to fly.' Hence Tertullian also says, 'Omnis spiritus alas,' every spirit is winged. And hence Mercury, the messenger of the gods, is said to be winged. Euripides applies the term to weapons, in Orestes, v. 274, 'The winged arrows of bows;' and Virgil, in Æn. b. 3, l. 38, 'Swifter than the winds and the wings of the thunderbolt.' And Claudian, b. 2, de Rapt. v. 218,

Pacificus robet torquent fulmina alas.'

Euripides, in Hecuba, v. 70, applies the term to dreams:

'O venerable Earth,
Mother of dreams, having black wings.'

And to spectres, in the same play, v. 704,

'A spectre passed by me, having dark wings.'

Hence we find them ascribed to the seraphim in Is. ch. 6, whose wings, six in number, were used for a threefold purpose—to cover the face, to cover the feet, and to fly.

And God Himself is said to 'walk upon the wings of the wind.' Ps. 104:3. The theology of the Gentiles attributed wings to their deities. Thus Virgil, Æn. 5, v. 657,

'Cum Deo se paribus per caelum sustulit alas.'

And Homer decks his hero Achilles in a similar manner, II. 19,

'The chief becloths himself with wondering eyes;
His arms he polices, and his motion tries;
Buoyed by some inward force, he seems to swim,
And feels a pinion lifting every limb.'

WITHIN AND WITHOUT. Those, in Scripture style, mean the Jews and the Gentiles, the one within and the other without the Mosaic law and covenant. Thus, in De. 25:5, 'the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger.'

And thus, in relation to those who were Christians, or within the church, and those who were not so, Paul says, 1 Co. 5:12, 'Do not ye judge them that are without? But them that are within, God judgeth.'

Co. 4:5, 'Walk in wisdom toward them that are without;' i. e. toward unconverted persons. And the same in 1 Th. 4:12.

And this language is used in reference to the New Jerusalem. Re. 22:15, 'For without are dogs and sorcerers,' &c.

WOMAN. Woman, in the symbolical language, is frequently the symbol of a city or body politic; of a nation or kingdom.

Thus, in Æschylus, Persæ, 181, the monarchy of Persia, and the republic of Greece, are represented in a symbolical dream by two women.

They who are acquainted with medals and inscriptions, many of which are symbolical, know that cities, as even Rome, frequently were represented by women. And so, in like manner, statues in the shape of women were made to represent cities.

In the ancient prophets, the symbol is very often used for the church or nation of the Jews. Thus, in Ez. ch. 16, there is a large description of that people under the symbol of a female child, growing up by several degrees to the stature of a woman, and then married to God, by entering into covenant with Him.

And therefore when the Israelites acted contrary to that covenant, by forsaking God and following idols, they then became properly represented by the symbol of an adulteress or harlot, that offers herself to all comers. Ez. 16:39, 38. 23:45. Ro. 2:1. Is. 1:21. Jer. 2:20. Ez. 16:15, 16, 35, &c. Ho. 1:2.

And adultery itself, or fornication in a married state, becomes the symbol of idolatry; as in Jer. 3:8, 9. Ez. 23:7, and 16:26, 29.

There is a very mysterious prophecy in Zech. 5:5, &c., where a woman is represented as sitting in an ephah, and as carried through the air by two others. It is not easy to say what meaning should be attached to it. Nicæus says, 'The meaning of the vision seems to be, that the Babylonish captivity had happened on account of the wickedness committed by the Jews; and that a like dispersion would befall them, if they relapsed into like crimes.' Thus the whole chapter is an awful admonition that multiplied curses, and particularly dispersion and captivity, would be the punishment of national guilt.

But Capellus's interpretation well deserves attention. He considers verse 8 as denoting that God treats on the neck of wickedness, and restrains it from expatiating; and verses 9, 10, 11, as signifying that God was propitious to the Jews, and transferred the punishment of iniquity to the Babylonians, whom the weight of the divine vengeance should ever depress. It may be added to the remark of this critic, that Babylon was soon to suffer a signal calamity from the reigning Persian monarch.

See a dissertation on this subject in the Æternitate Sacra of Ewaldus, vol. iii. p. 508, &c.

For an explanation of that other vision in Re. 12:1, &c., see the Dissertation of the same author, and Lowman on the Revelation in Is., where the church is represented by the figure of a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.

Women are sometimes used metaphorically for weak and effeminate persons; as Is. 3:2, 12. 16. Jer. 50:37. 51:30. Na. 3:12.

WRITE signifies to publish or testify, because this is the first intention of writing; and at first no writings were made but upon pillars or other monuments, merely to testify things.

Thus, when God says, in Is. 65:6, 'Behold it is written before Me,' it immediately follows as synonymous, 'I will not keep silence.' And in Jer. 23:30, it is said, 'Write this man children;' i. e. publish and let all men know, that this man shall be children.

And hence, because writing is publishing, therefore an author not read, is, with Martial, one that hath not written,—

'Versiculos in me narratore scribere Chæmo,
Non scribit, cujus carmina æque brevia.'

Lib. 1, Ep. 1

By the notification of things, the effect intended is brought about; and, in this sense, to write is to effect.

Solomon says, Pr. 7:3,

'Bind my words upon thy fingers;
Write them upon the tablet of thine heart.'

He of course meant that such precepts should be understood figuratively; and yet it was on such texts as these that the Pharisees founded their practice of binding phylacteries upon their foreheads. See Ez. 13:16. De. 6:5. 11:18. And hence, perhaps, also the popular phrase among us, of having a thing at the fingers' ends, when we are perfectly acquainted with it. Dorell.
